INTRODUCTION

THE publication of the Lyrical Ballads furnishes one of those dates in literature by which it is convenient to mark epochs. The 'ignoramuses and Pope-admirers' ¹ were until 1798. Thereafter poetry is recalled to those elements of speech and feeling which are primary and underivative, and relies for its power upon its truthfulness. To the volume of 1798 Coleridge contributed, not only that poem which is commonly accounted his master-work, the Ancient Mariner, but three poems in blank verse which are greater than anything else which he achieved in the same kind. But the book was 'not liked at all by any'.² It fell flat—it is probable, indeed, that any curiosity which it excited was due to the suspicion that Coleridge was its author. It was, in fact, Coleridge's first failure in poetry. Two and a half years earlier he had achieved a notable repute by his Poems on Various Subjects.³ Upon this work the reviews had 'cataracted and cascaded panegyric'; a new edition had been called for within a year; and a third was already in preparation before the Lyrical Ballads went to press.⁴ Moreover, in the spring of 1798 Coleridge had written, and in the autumn, before the publication of the Lyrical Ballads, had published, Fears in Solitude, France: an Ode, Frost at Midnight—a quarto volume, brief but golden. In the joint-venture, therefore, of the Lyrical Ballads, he staked a good deal more than Wordsworth—for he staked a reputation already achieved. Wordsworth was unknown, or known unfavourably: it needed Coleridge himself to discover in the Evening Walk and Descriptive Sketches what no obtusity of criticism could miss in Poems on Various Subjects, 'the emergence of an original poetical genius'.¹ The bargain of the Lyrical Ballads was, in fact, inequitable, save that either poet had that easy confidence in himself and in the other, and in the greatness of their common enterprise, which made the calculation of interest impossible. We can see now that this confidence was not merely noble but reasonable. Yet a contemporary observer, it is likely, would have judged differently, and would have credited to Coleridge some degree of quixotism.

Before he formed that friendship with Wordsworth which, if friendship may be known by its fruits, is probably the most notable in literature, Coleridge had in fact accomplished in poetry work of which the sum and quality are alike remarkable. A good deal of this work carries a diction plainly derivative; in particular, the earlier pieces show traces of the dominant influence of Gray and Collins—the Song of the Pixies is only one example among many. In 1794² begins a period of conscious 'Miltonising':

Fair the vernal mead,
Fair the high grove, the sea, the sun, the stars;
True impress each of their creating Sire!
Yet nor high grove, nor many-colour'd mead,
Nor the green ocean with his thousand isles,
Nor the starred azure, nor the sovran sun,
E'er with such majesty of portraiture
Imaged the supreme beauty uncreate,
As thou, meek Saviour! at the fearful hour
When thy insulted anguish winged the prayer
Harped by Archangels, when they sing of mercy!
Which when the Almighty heard, from forth his throne
Diviner light filled Heaven with ecstasy,
Heaven's hymnings paused; and Hell her yawning mouth
Closed a brief moment.

² Religious Musings was begun on Dec. 24, 1794.

Religious Musings, of which those lines form part of the exordium, was called by Lamb 'the noblest poem in the language next after Paradise Lost'. The praise was exaggerated; and Mr. Swinburne, indeed, has called the poem 'damnable'; and certainly not all of it sustains the high Miltonic note of the exordium. Yet if a good deal of the matter and manner of the poem is weak, or offensive, it remains a composition in which the discerning reader will scarcely miss the presage of a talent capacious of sublime effects. In the fragmentary Destiny of Nations, again, an unbribed judgement will certainly find those merits and defects of which mediocre talent is commonly sterile. This is, after Religious Musings, the most considerable of Coleridge's 'pre-Wordsworthian' pieces; and the casual student will note with surprise the degree to which portions of it, perhaps the best portions,¹ anticipate that manner which we recognize as distinctively Wordsworthian.

Yet, when this has been said, it remains true that nearly all of what is supreme in Coleridge's poetry was written when he was with, or near, Wordsworth. Far the greater portion of it dates from the years at Nether Stowey (1797-8); when Coleridge and Wordsworth (and Dorothy Wordsworth) met daily; when, in Coleridge's phrase, they were 'three persons and one soul'. The next most considerable portion belongs to the years 1802-3--the period of the Keswick-Grasmere intercourse. But the west country was Coleridge's own country; and in Cumberland the slate-grey of sky and lake and hills—and the slate-grey houses—bore heavily, it may be suspected, upon his health of mind and body; it was not for nothing that Jeffrey called the Lakists a 'school of hypochondriacs'—this slate-grey ate into their souls. During the three years that followed Coleridge was abroad—whether seeking or shunning health, it would be difficult to say. The influence of Wordsworth was withdrawn; and these were years of waste, and, to speak plainly, of ruin. Not until the beginning of 1807 do we get again from Coleridge any note of the old greatness; and then it is evoked by Wordsworth—by Wordsworth's recitation of the Prelude.¹ To the year 1809 belongs the poem entitled A Tombless Epitaph: here Coleridge recaptures for a moment his height of power, in writing about a great subject which he alone understood, himself. Even so, when he wrote this piece, he had just resumed at Keswick the frayed threads of intimate communion with Wordsworth. The Selection of Coleridge's poetry contained in this volume offers but seven pieces of a later date; and it may be doubted whether it would be a service to Coleridge's fame to offer more. Of these seven, three date from the period when he was at work upon the Biographia Literaria, when the greatness of Wordsworth recreated itself to his mind. The other four pieces are the flotsam and jetsam of the once exuberant tides of his imagination—of three of them the titles are sufficiently significant: Youth and Age, Work without Hope, An Epitaph; and of the fourth, oddly compounded of dreamy youth and listless age, he tells us that it was written in one of those most weary hours,

When life seems emptied of all genial powers.²

Character, rather than talent, determined this dependence upon Wordsworth. Both men bore souls consciously dedicated to poetry, hearts weaned from worldly interest. But it was as hard for Wordsworth, one might fancy, to be ever false, as for Coleridge to be consistently true, to his dedication. It was as natural for Wordsworth, in his life and in his poetry, to pursue a single plan, as it was for Coleridge to conceive each day a new enterprise, and, of things grandiosely conceived, to carry none to its fulfilment. Circumstance, upon the whole, was not unkind to him ; indeed, in more than one crisis of his affairs, that hard step-mother of genius showed to him a melting countenance. If it were proper from the fate of genius to draw any moral applicable to common life, we might suppose ourselves to learn from Coleridge that Circumstance is mostly placable, Character invariably merciless. To opinion, and to disappointment, Wordsworth opposed a panoply of inalienable self-righteousness ; but through the garment of self-pity in which Coleridge involved himself the winds of the world pierced with cruel penetrancy. Yet of humour, in which Wordsworth was deficient, Coleridge was finely redundant : sometimes, indeed, inappositely redundant—in the darkest period of his opium-slavery he laughed immoderately over Cottle's letters of religious advice, when something of Wordsworth's covenanting humourlessness would have served him better. If Wordsworth was humourless—or because he was—he was truthful ; it was impossible for him to describe anything otherwise than as he actually saw it. But ' All poets go to hell ', Coleridge had been told by the ghost of Gray, ' we are so intolerably addicted to lying ' ;¹ and he had a fancy to prove the thesis.

Perhaps indeed the grand failure of Coleridge was the failure to be completely honest. He was completely honest neither with himself nor with his work. Where he was honest with his neighbours, it was not from principle, but by a flair which he had for grandiose behaviour. If his best work came from his connexion with Wordsworth, it was because here he made contact with an astonishingly matter-of-fact honesty ; which he was able to recognize, let it be added, not as an ornament, or attribute, but as the essence, of Wordsworth's power as a poet.

Thereby he became the first (as he remains the greatest) of

the Wordsworthians. Wordsworth, it should in fairness be recalled, was, if not the first, at least (after Lamb) the most faithful, of the Coleridgians—with a faithfulness often hardly tried. He spoke of Coleridge, when he died, as of the most wonderful man he had ever known¹; and truly the early years of their friendship had been years of wonder. In the quality of wonder, indeed, Coleridge was easily pre-eminent; and his great examples of the quality—the Ancient Mariner, Christabel, Kubla Khan—are work beyond Wordsworth's range. But it is perhaps more interesting, and more important, to observe that, in a different order of work, in a genre which both poets affect, Coleridge achieved some of his finest successes; and that of the peculiar talent which makes the kind he had given notable premonitions some years before Wordsworth essayed it. Upon one of the blank-verse pieces which he contributed to the Lyrical Ballads Coleridge bestowed the subsidiary title 'A Conversation Poem'. But he had already employed the type four years earlier. The expression 'A Conversation Poem' recalls (as it was no doubt meant to do) the Horatian 'Sermoni Propriora'—words which stand at the head of the poem Reflections on having left a Place of Retirement (1795); and which were also at one time, as it would seem,¹ prefixed to the earlier lines To a Young Ass (1794). Both the two last-named poems have been admitted to the Selection contained in this volume; not so much upon their proper merit, as from their importance in marking development. In both Coleridge is already a Wordsworthian²—at a time when Wordsworth himself was still a 'Darwinian', a disciple, that is to say, of the author of the Botanic Garden. If the verses To a Young Ass are, as some critics have found them to be, not altogether free

² As in a different species, we have seen, in the Destiny of Nations (1796).

from absurdity, they are at least absurd in a manner not possible to a mean talent ; and in such lines as we have already passed, the Popian couplet notwithstanding (a form which Coleridge never managed well), out of Pope into the very world of the Lyrical Ballads. Take, again, such lines as these :

And oft with gentle hand I give thee bread,
And clap thy ragged coat, and pat thy head,

Low was our pretty Cot : our tallest Rose
Peep'd at the chamber-window. We could hear
At silent noon, and eve, and early morn,
The Sea's faint murmur. In the open air
Our Myrtles blossom'd ; and across the porch
Thick Jasmines twin'd : the little landscape round
Was green and woody, and refresh'd the eye.
It was a spot which you might aptly call
The Valley of Seclusion.¹

Already there Coleridge is doing with credit what later, but only later, only when Coleridge had taught him, Wordsworth did with genius. Coleridge himself, with a true critical instinct, singled out his ' shorter blank verse poems ' as the best part of his early work ;² and the same critical instinct enabled him to diagnose their defect : where they fail, it is because their simplicity is affected, it is a ' pretence of simplicity '.² They are work not as yet quite honest. That supreme poetical honesty which belongs to Wordsworth Coleridge perhaps never quite learned. He achieves it in patches ; but even in this species (of which he may properly be accounted the inventor), even in the short reflective poem in blank verse,³ in the Conversation Poem, he never quite hits Wordsworth's settled manner.

² Biographia Literaria, i, pp. 16 sqq.

³ Mostly, but not always, in blank verse : a notably successful example in ' heroics ' is the Garden of Boccaccio. An early example in blank verse, not included in this Selection, is the Eolian Harp.

In this species, none the less, is to be sought his finest work, excepting always the magical triad, the Ancient Mariner, Christabel, Kubla Khan. The three great Odes notwithstanding, this may still be said ; and indeed, the last and greatest of them, Dejection, confirms the thesis. If Dejection is to be called an Ode at all, we must call it a Conversation Ode ; and its opening lines sufficiently announce its character :

Well ! If the Bard was weather-wise, who made
The grand old ballad of Sir Patrick Spence . . .

Did ever odist prelude with this ' Well ! ' ? The other two Odes are less easily appraised ; but neither of them suffices to assure us that Coleridge in fact knew what an ode was. In the earlier of them, To the Departing Year, a true and appealing rhetoric is fitfully intermixed with the crudest pseudo-Pindarics, verse nobly sonorous jostles with rhodomontade. How much of true and false is in this piece almost absurdly commingled, any one may satisfy himself who will be at pains to read, first the splendidly impressive exordium,

Spirit who sweepst the wild harp of Time, and then the idle jig and flaunt of such stuff as this, from the penultimate stanza :

Abandoned of Heaven ! mad Avarice thy guide,
At cowardly distance, yet kindling with pride—
Mid thy herds and thy cornfields secure thou hast stood,
And joined the wild yelling of Famine and Blood.

Was ever such Red-Flag rubbish heard upon lips which the hallowed coals have kindled ?

France : an Ode, is freer (but not wholly free) of this falsity. It sustains over wide tracts a high bardic level ; yet admonishing us, even so, not once nor twice, only, that between the bardic and turgidity there is no luxury of interspace. Its indubitable grandeur perhaps culminates in the indignant challenge,

Was this thy boast, Champion of human kind,
To mix with Kings in the low lust of sway ?

But even here it may be permitted to ask whether this is, after all, the proper grandeur of an Ode, and not that of inspired conversation.

Inspired conversation. Here was an art in which not even his enemies denied to Coleridge an unchallengeable pre-eminence. It is valuable, in an age credulous of heroes but oddly sceptical of gods, to emphasize that character of the life of poetry which consists in inspiration. More fully and consistently than poets of greater effectiveness, Coleridge hit this character. With the same ease with which other men are protractedly dull, Coleridge was without intermission inspired. Yet with an inspiration curiously self-indulgent. He yielded himself wholly to the momentary rapture, to the melting influences of his own temperament. It was not in him to save the transport for epic or Ode, for tragedy or for a sustained Lucretian flight. But in conversation, and in the Conversation Poem, he was for ever pouring out magnanimously, or with a grandly calculated carelessness spilling, the wine of a spirituality limitlessly fecund. Add (and you have perhaps said all) that thrice in his life he punctuated the else unintermitted vocality of his inspiration by a pause of supernatural silence; and was content to hear, and thereafter with curious fidelity—as though he were an instrument purely passive—to record those eyrie voices of nature which speak to us articulately in the magical triad'.

Coleridge's rank in the poetry of his country has been variously assessed; and the waxing or waning of his repute follows, perhaps, the greater or less demand at different periods for efficiency in character and performance.

Never perhaps was a poet of equal gifts equally inefficient : inefficient in affairs, in friendship, in poetry. That is easily said, and truly, and is necessary to say. And yet, while of what may be called clean efficiency Coleridge had nothing, there may perhaps be registered for him, and indeed pressed, a claim to that kind of blurred efficiency which consists in being uniformly interesting and never negligible. To the regard of a world in which most men—and especially eminent men—are dull, this is perhaps an equitable and enduring title. Among the men of his day who were interesting, hardly one interested either a wider circle or one better worth attaching. He influenced profoundly, not only the common opinion of his time, but the opinions and feelings of great men. In his poetry he has left a body of work in which nearly everything is imperfect, but in which, when all is said and done, almost nothing is uninteresting. Such a Selection as the present—aiming as it does to present consummate work—does him small justice. He is more profitably, and more justly, read in bulk ; and yet can only be so read by those who, patient of blurred effects, bring to the study of him a considerable charity. Most of his life, boy and man, he lived (if truth be told) upon charity. And in the history of literature he will continue, the inspired foundling of our poetry, to live upon that charity which is neither properly nor prudently refused to genius and lofty aims struggling with infirmity of the will. After all, just as in life he had qualities which compel sympathy (even where they do not always deserve it), a temperament hovering between magnanimity and sentimentality, a liveliness of mind perpetually driven from the ingenious to the true, and back again, an instinct for pity ludicrously divided between himself and others ; even so in his poetry he discovers those qualities which melt hardness. That ‘echo of magnificence of mind’ which is the mystery of style, his verse renders to us, if uncertainly, yet insistently. In that part of poetry in which the distinction fails, which obtains elsewhere so obstinately between the invention of images and the discovery of truth, his mind moves in a fashion ingeniously liberating. And above all, whenever he is most himself, most a poet, he has that power to quicken sensibility, to make the spirit beautiful or pitiful, which poetry shares with dreams and our most precious memories, and the stars and either twilight.

Of Coleridge's work in prose this Introduction has said nothing ; nor in the Selection which it accompanies has there been accorded to his prose a space proportionate to his repute in criticism. The fact is that, of innumerable critical enterprises, he brought only one to completion—the Biographia Literaria : if indeed that odd medley of personal reminiscence, metaphysic, letters, political tirade, and criticism of poetry, can be called complete. Perhaps it is as complete as Coleridge was capable of making anything. That portion of it which is most valuable lies in the chapters upon Wordsworth ; and from the present Selection these are excluded—for the reason that they fill already so large a space in the volume in the same series which deals with Wordsworth. But, in any case, the overweight of poetry in this Selection is offered with calculation ; and in the belief that Coleridge's critical essays and lectures receive, commonly, more praise than they deserve, his poems—not only the best of them, but the second best, especially—a good deal less. From a temperament such as Coleridge had, it were idle to expect either a safe critical judgement or a connected method and style. But these qualities—which prose demands—poetry, which sees, and reveals, by flashes, and unpredictably neither affects nor misses. It is, in the nature of it, not finite ; and of this in it Coleridge, who finished nothing, took magnificent advantage.

He took magnificent advantage of it ; and yet the tragedy of this unfinished magnificence must be the abiding thought in connexion with all he did. The poetry of Wordsworth, ' a temple, like a cloud slowly surmounting ' the ' invidious hill ' of conventional opinion, has long since ' risen out of darkness ' into the space and light proper to immortal work. It stands out in clear and sure proportion, with ' spire star-high ' and ' towers of deep foundation ' and arches consciously safe against the winds of fashion.¹ Beside it, if men were masters of their own will or of circumstance, there should have stood a sister temple not less aspiring in its outline, fashioned in a more glowing material, richer in detail, embodying ideas of beauty more intricate and fantastic, and yet not alien. In remains, of which it might be doubted whether they were perfect work undone by the power of time, or grandiose beginnings made frustrate by human infirmity, we can still trace, of this sister temple, the magnanimous proportions, and catch against the sunset its pageant of colour. Here and there a spirit that felt, before all needs, the need for confession, has perfected with curious workmanship, so that nothing remains to add, some shrine or niche or cell. But, for the rest, the aisles are roofless, arches stand which carry no towers, the columns end in air. The façade bears a melancholy legend : ' The Mighty One that persecuteth me is on this side and on that ; He pursueth my soul like the wind, like the sand-blast he passeth through me ; He is around me even as the air.'²

³ The use of this cryptogram is due to Coleridge's belief that the Greek word ἵστησε means ' stands firm '. The Greek for ' stands firm ' is, in fact, ἵστηκε.

HAZLITT

The Lost Leader

From Lectures on the English Poets, 1818

I MAY say of him here, that he is the only person I ever knew who answered to the idea of a man of genius. He is the only person from whom I ever learnt any thing. There is only one thing he could learn from me in return, but that he has not. He was the first poet I ever knew. His genius at that time had angelic wings, and fed on manna. He talked on for ever ; and you wished him to talk on for ever. His thoughts did not seem to come with labour and effort ; but as if borne on the gusts of genius, and as if the wings of his imagination lifted him from off his feet. His voice 10 rolled on the ear like the pealing organ, and its sound alone was the music of thought. His mind was clothed with wings ; and raised on them, he lifted philosophy to heaven. In his descriptions, you then saw the progress of human happiness and liberty in bright and never-ending succession, like the steps of Jacob's ladder, with airy shapes ascending and descending, and with the voice of God at the top of the ladder. And shall I, who heard him then, listen to him now ? Not I ! . . . That spell is broke ; that time is gone 20 for ever ; that voice is heard no more : but still the recollection comes rushing by with thoughts of long-past years, and rings in my ears with never-dying sound.

COLERIDGE

as Preacher and Talker

From My First Acquaintance with Poets, first printed in The Liberal, 1823 .

MY father was a Dissenting Minister, at Wem, in Shropshire ; and in the year 1798 (the figures that compose the date are to me like the 'dreaded name of Demogorgon') Mr. Coleridge came to Shrewsbury, to succeed Mr. Rowe in the spiritual charge of a Unitarian Congregation there. He did not come till late on the Saturday afternoon before he was to preach ; and Mr. Rowe, who himself went down to the coach, in a state of anxiety and expectation, to look for the arrival of his successor, could find no one at all answering the description but a round-faced man, in a short black coat (like a shooting-jacket) which hardly seemed to have been made for him, but who seemed to be talking at a great rate to his fellow passengers. Mr. Rowe had scarce 10 returned to give an account of his disappointment when the round-faced man in black entered, and dissipated all doubts on the subject by beginning to talk. He did not cease while he stayed ; nor has he since, that I know of. He held the good town of Shrewsbury in delightful suspense for three weeks that he remained there, ' fluttering the proud Salopians, like an eagle in a dove-cote ' ; and the Welsh mountains that skirt the horizon with their tempestuous confusion, agree to have heard no such mystic sounds since the days of 20 High-born Hoel's harp or soft Llewellyn's lay.

As we passed along between Wem and Shrewsbury, and I eyed their blue tops seen through the wintry branches, or the red rustling leaves of the sturdy oak-trees by the road-side, a sound was in my ears as of a Siren's song ; I was stunned, startled with it, as from deep sleep ; but I had no notion then that I should ever be able to express my admiration to others in motley imagery or quaint allusion, till the light of his genius shone into my soul, like the sun's rays glittering in the puddles of the road. I was 30 at that time dumb, inarticulate, helpless, like a worm by the way-side, crushed, bleeding, lifeless ; but now, bursting the deadly bands that bound them,

With Styx nine times round them, my ideas float on winged words, and as they expand their plumes, catch the golden light of other years. My soul has indeed remained in its original bondage, dark, obscure, with longings infinite and unsatisfied ; my heart, shut up in the prison-house of this rude clay, has never found, nor will it ever find, a heart to speak to ; but that my understanding also did not remain dumb and brutish, or at length found a language to express itself, I owe to Coleridge. But this is not to my purpose.

My father lived ten miles from Shrewsbury, and was in the habit of exchanging visits with Mr. Rowe, and with 10 Mr. Jenkins of Whitchurch (nine miles farther on), according to the custom of Dissenting Ministers in each other's neighbourhood. A line of communication is thus established, by which the flame of civil and religious liberty is kept alive, and nourishes its smouldering fire unquenchable, like the fires in the Agamemnon of Aeschylus, placed at different stations, that waited for ten long years to announce with their blazing pyramids the destruction of Troy. Coleridge had agreed to come over and see my father, according to the courtesy of the country, as Mr. Rowe's 20 probable successor ; but in the meantime, I had gone to hear him preach the Sunday after his arrival. A poet and a philosopher getting up into a Unitarian pulpit to preach the gospel, was a romance in these degenerate days, a sort of revival of the primitive spirit of Christianity, which was not to be resisted.

It was in January of 1798, that I rose one morning before daylight, to walk ten miles in the mud, to hear this celebrated person preach. Never, the longest day I have to live, shall I have such another walk as this cold, raw, 30 comfortless one, in the winter of the year 1798. Il y a des impressions que ni le tems ni les circonstances peuvent effacer. Dussé-je vivre des siècles entiers, le doux tems de ma jeunesse ne peut renaître pour moi, ni s'effacer jamais dans ma mémoire. When I got there, the organ was playing the rooth Psalm, and when it was done, Mr. Coleridge rose and gave out his text, 'And he went up into the mountain to pray, HIMSELF, ALONE.' As he gave out this text, his voice 'rose like a steam of rich distilled perfumes', and when he came to the two last words, which he pronounced loud, deep, and distinct, it seemed to me, who was then young, as if the sounds had echoed from the bottom of the human heart, and as if that prayer might have floated in solemn silence through the universe. The idea of St. John came 10 into my mind, 'of one crying in the wilderness, who had his loins girt about, and whose food was locusts and wild honey.' The preacher then launched into his subject, like an eagle dallying with the wind. The sermon was upon peace and war; upon church and state -- not their alliance but their separation--on the spirit of the world and the spirit of Christianity, not as the same, but as opposed to one another. He talked of those who had 'inscribed the cross of Christ on banners dripping with human gore'. He made a poetical and pastoral excursion --and to show the fatal effects of 20 war, drew a striking contrast between the simple shepherd-boy, driving his team afield, or sitting under the hawthorn, piping to his flock, 'as though he should never be old,' and the same poor country lad, crimped, kidnapped, brought into town, made drunk at an alehouse, turned into a wretched drummer-boy, with his hair sticking on end with powder and pomatum, a long cue at his back, and tricked out in the loathsome finery of the profession of blood:

Such were the notes our once-loved poet sung.

And for myself, I could not have been more delighted if 30 I had heard the music of the spheres. Poetry and Philosophy had met together. Truth and Genius had embraced, under the eye and with the sanction of Religion. This was even beyond my hopes. I returned home well satisfied. The sun that was still labouring pale and wan through the sky, obscured by thick mists, seemed an emblem of the good cause; and the cold dank drops of dew, that hung half melted on the beard of the thistle, had something genial and refreshing in them; for there was a spirit of hope and youth in all nature, that turned everything into good.

On the Tuesday following, the half-inspired speaker came. I was called down into the room where he was, and went half-hoping, half-afraid. He received me very graciously, and I listened for a long time without uttering ¹⁰ a word. I did not suffer in his opinion by my silence. 'For those two hours,' he afterwards was pleased to say, 'he was conversing with William Hazlitt's forehead!' His appearance was different from what I had anticipated from seeing him before. At a distance, and in the dim light of the chapel, there was to me a strange wildness in his aspect, a dusky obscurity, and I thought him pitted with the small-pox. His complexion was at that time clear, and even bright--

His forehead was broad and high, light as if built of ivory, with large projecting eyebrows, and his eyes rolling beneath them, like a sea with darkened lustre. 'A certain tender bloom his face o'erspread,' a purple tinge as we see it in the pale thoughtful complexions of the Spanish portrait-painters, Murillo and Velasquez. His mouth was gross, voluptuous, open, eloquent; his chin good-humoured and round; but his nose, the rudder of the face, the index of the will, was small, feeble, nothing—like what he has done. It might seem that the genius of his face as from a height ³⁰ surveyed and projected him (with sufficient capacity and huge aspiration) into the world unknown of thought and imagination, with nothing to support or guide his veering purpose, as if Columbus had launched his adventurous course for the New World in a scallop, without oars or compass. So, at least, I comment on it after the event. Coleridge, in his person, was rather above the common size, inclining to the corpulent, or like Lord Hamlet, 'somewhat fat and pursy.' His hair (now, alas ! grey) was then black and glossy as the raven's, and fell in smooth masses over his forehead. This long pendulous hair is peculiar to enthusiasts, to those whose minds tend heavenward ; and is traditionally inseparable (though of a different colour) 10 from the pictures of Christ. It ought to belong, as a character, to all who preach Christ crucified, and Coleridge was at that time one of those !

On my way back I had a sound in my ears—it was the voice of Fancy ; I had a light before me—it was the face of Poetry. The one still lingers there, the other has not quitted my side ! Coleridge, in truth, met me half-way on the ground of philosophy, or I should not have been won over to his imaginative creed. I had an uneasy, pleasurable sensation all the time, till I was to visit him. During those 20 months the chill breath of winter gave me a welcoming ; the vernal air was balm and inspiration to me. The golden sunsets, the silver star of evening, lighted me on my way to new hopes and prospects. I was to visit Coleridge in the spring. This circumstance was never absent from my thoughts, and mingled with all my feelings. I wrote to him at the time proposed, and received an answer postponing my intended visit for a week or two, but very cordially urging me to complete my promise then. This delay did not damp, but rather increased my ardour. In 30 the meantime, I went to Llangollen Vale, by way of initiating myself in the mysteries of natural scenery ; and I must say I was enchanted with it. I had been reading Coleridge's description of England in his fine Ode on the Departing Year, and I applied it, con amore, to the objects before me. That valley was to me (in a manner) the cradle of a new existence : in the river that winds through it, my spirit was baptized in the waters of Helicon !

From HAZLITT'S

SPIRIT OF THE AGE

1825

THE present is an age of talkers, and not of doers ; and the reason is, that the world is growing old. We are so far advanced in the Arts and Sciences, that we live in retrospect, and doat on past achievements. The accumulation of knowledge has been so great, that we are lost in wonder at the height it has reached, instead of attempting to climb or add to it ; while the variety of objects distracts and dazzles the 10 looker-on. What niche remains unoccupied ? What path untried ? What is the use of doing anything, unless we could do better than all those who have gone before us ? What hope is there of this ? We are like those who have been to see some noble monument of art, who are content to admire without thinking of rivalling it ; or like guests after a feast, who praise the hospitality of the donor ' and thank the bounteous Pan '—perhaps carrying away some trifling fragments ; or like the spectators of a mighty battle, who still hear its sound afar off, and the clashing of armour 20 and the neighing of the war-horse and the shout of victory is in their ears, like the rushing of innumerable waters !

Mr. Coleridge has ' a mind reflecting ages past ' ; his voice is like the echo of the congregated roar of the ' dark rearward and abyss ' of thought. He who has seen a mouldering tower by the side of a crystal lake, hid by the mist, but glittering in the wave below, may conceive the dim, gleaming, uncertain intelligence of his eye : he who has marked the evening clouds uprolled (a world of vapours), has seen the picture of his mind, unearthly, unsubstantial, with gorgeous tints and ever-varying forms—

That which was now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water.

Our author's mind is (as he himself might express it) tangential. There is no subject on which he has not touched, none on which he has rested. With an understanding fertile, subtle, expansive, 'quick, forgetive, apprehensive,'
10 beyond all living precedent, few traces of it will perhaps remain. He lends himself to all impressions alike; he gives up his mind and liberty of thought to none. He is a general lover of art and science, and wedded to no one in particular. He pursues knowledge as a mistress, with outstretched hands and winged speed; but as he is about to embrace her, his Daphne turns—alas! not to a laurel! Hardly a speculation has been left on record from the earliest time, but it is loosely folded up in Mr. Coleridge's memory, like a rich, but somewhat tattered piece of 20 tapestry: we might add (with more seeming than real extravagance), that scarce a thought can pass through the mind of man, but its sound has at some time or other passed over his head with rustling pinions. On whatever question or author you speak, he is prepared to take up the theme with advantage—from Peter Abelard down to Thomas Moore, from the subtlest metaphysics to the politics of the Courier. There is no man of genius, in whose praise he descants, but the critic seems to stand above the author, and 'what in him is weak, to strengthen, what is 30 low, to raise and support': nor is there any work of genius that does not come out of his hands like an illuminated Missal, sparkling even in its defects. If Mr. Coleridge had not been the most impressive talker of his age, he would probably have been the finest writer; but he lays down his pen to make sure of an auditor, and mortgages the admiration of posterity for the stare of an idler. If he had not been a poet, he would have been a powerful logician ; if he had not dipped his wing in the Unitarian controversy, he might have soared to the very summit of fancy. But in writing verse, he is trying to subject the Muse to transcendental theories : in his abstract reasoning, he misses his way by strewing it with flowers. All that he has done of moment, he had done twenty years ago : since then, he may be said to have lived on the sound of his own voice. Mr. Coleridge is too rich in intellectual wealth, to need to task himself to any drudgery : he has only to draw the sliders of his imagination, and a thousand subjects expand before him, startling him with their brilliancy, or losing themselves in endless obscurity--

And by the force of bleat illusion,
They draw him on to his confusion.

What is the little he could add to the stock, compared with the countless stores that lie about him, that he should stoop to pick up a name, or to polish an idle fancy ? He walks abroad in the majesty of an universal understanding, eyeing the ' rich strond ', or golden sky above him, and ' goes sounding on his way ', in eloquent accents, uncompelled and free !

Persons of the greatest capacity are often those who, for this reason, do the least ; for surveying themselves from the highest point of view, amidst the infinite variety of the universe, their own share in it seems trifling, and scarce worth a thought, and they prefer the contemplation of all that is, or has been, or can be, to the making a coil about doing what, when done, is no better than vanity. It is hard to concentrate all our attention and efforts on one pursuit, except from ignorance of others ; and without this concentration of our faculties, no great progress can be made in any one thing. It is not merely that the mind is not capable of the effort ; it does not think the effort worth making. Action is one ; but thought is manifold. He whose restless eye glances through the wide compass of nature and art, will not consent to have ' his own nothings monstered ' : but he must do this, before he can give his whole soul to them. The mind, after ' letting contemplation have its fill ', or

Sailing with supreme dominion
Through the azure deep of air,

10 sinks down on the ground, breathless, exhausted, powerless, inactive ; or if it must have some vent to its feelings, seeks the most easy and obvious ; is soothed by friendly flattery, lulled by the murmur of immediate applause, thinks as it were aloud, and babbles in its dreams ! A scholar (so to speak) is a more disinterested and abstracted character than a mere author. The first looks at the numberless volumes of a library, and says, ' All these are mine ' : the other points to a single volume (perhaps it may be an immortal one) and says, ' My name is written on the back 20 of it.' This is a puny and grovelling ambition, beneath the lofty amplitude of Mr. Coleridge's mind. No, he revolves in his wayward soul, or utters to the passing wind, or discourses to his own shadow, things mightier and more various !—Let us draw the curtain, and unlock the shrine.

Learning rocked him in his cradle, and while yet a child,

He lisped in numbers, for the numbers came.

At sixteen he wrote his Ode on Chatterton, and he still reverts to that period with delight, not so much as it relates 30 to himself (for that string of his own early promise of fame rather jars than otherwise), but as exemplifying the youth of a poet. Mr. Coleridge talks of himself, without being an egotist, for in him the individual is always merged in the abstract and general. He distinguished himself at school and at the University by his knowledge of the classics, and gained several prizes for Greek epigrams. How many men are there (great scholars, celebrated names in literature) who having done the same thing in their youth, have no other idea all the rest of their lives but of this achievement, of a fellowship and dinner, and who, installed in academic honours, would look down on our author as a mere strolling bard ! At Christ's Hospital, where he was brought up, he was the idol of those among his schoolfellows who mingled with their bookish studies the music of thought and of 10 humanity ; and he was usually attended round the cloisters by a group of these (inspiring and inspired) ; whose hearts, even then, burnt within them as he talked, and where the sounds yet linger to mock ELLA on his way, still turning pensive to the past ! One of the finest and rarest parts of Mr. Coleridge's conversation is when he expatiates on the Greek tragedians (not that he is not well acquainted, when he pleases, with the epic poets, or the philosophers, or orators, or historians of antiquity)--on the subtle reasonings and melting pathos of Euripides, on the harmonious 20 gracefulness of Sophocles, tuning his love-laboured song, like sweetest warblings from a sacred grove ; on the high-wrought trumpet-tongued eloquence of Aeschylus, whose Prometheus, above all, is like an Ode to Fate, and a pleading with Providence, his thoughts being let loose as his body is chained on his solitary rock, and his afflicted will (the emblem of mortality)

Struggling in vain with ruthless destiny.

As the impassioned critic speaks and rises in his theme, you would think you heard the voice of the Man hated by the 30 Gods, contending with the wild winds as they roar, and his eye glitters with the spirit of Antiquity !

Next, he was engaged with Hartley's tribes of mind, ' ethereal braid, thought-woven '—and he busied himself for a year or two with vibrations and vibratiuncles and the great law of association that binds all things in its mystic chain, and the doctrine of Necessity (the mild teacher of Charity) and the Millennium, anticipative of a life to come—and he plunged deep into the controversy on Matter and Spirit, and, as an escape from Dr. Priestley's Materialism, where he felt himself imprisoned by the logician's spell, like Ariel in the cloven pine-tree, he became suddenly enamoured of Bishop Berkeley's fairy-world, and used in all companies

10 to build the universe, like a brave poetical fiction, of fine words—and he was deep-read in Malebranche, and in Cudworth's Intellectual System (a huge pile of learning, unwieldy, enormous) and in Lord Brook's hieroglyphic theories, and in Bishop Butler's Sermons, and in the Duchess of Newcastle's fantastic folios, and in Clarke and South and Tillotson, and all the fine thinkers and masculine reasoners of that age—and Leibnitz's Pre-established Harmony reared its arch above his head, like the rainbow in the cloud, covenanting with the hopes of man—and
20 then he fell plump, ten thousand fathoms down (but his wings saved him harmless) into the hortus siccus of Dissent, where he pared religion down to the standard of reason, and stripped faith of mystery, and preached Christ crucified and the Unity of the Godhead, and so dwelt for a while in the spirit with John Huss and Jerome of Prague and Socinus and old John Zisca, and ran through Neal's History of the Puritans, and Calamy's Non-Conformists' Memorial, having like thoughts and passions with them—but then Spinoza became his God, and he took up the vast chain of 30 being in his hand, and the round world became the centre and the soul of all things in some shadowy sense, forlorn of meaning, and around him he beheld the living traces and the sky-pointing proportions of the mighty Pan—but poetry redeemed him from this spectral philosophy, and he bathed his heart in beauty, and gazed at the golden light of heaven, and drank of the spirit of the universe, and wandered at eve by fairy-stream or fountain,

—When he saw nought but beauty,
When he heard the voice of that Almighty One
In every breeze that blew, or wave that murmured—

and wedded with truth in Plato's shade, and in the writings of Proclus and Plotinus saw the ideas of things in the eternal mind, and unfolded all mysteries with the Schoolmen and fathomed the depths of Duns Scotus and Thomas Aquinas, and entered the third heaven with Jacob Behmen, and 10 walked hand in hand with Swedenborg through the pavilions of the New Jerusalem, and sung his faith in the promise and in the world in his Religious Musings—and lowering himself from that dizzy height, poised himself on Milton's wings, and spread out his thoughts in charity with the glad prose of Jeremy Taylor, and wept over Bowles's Sonnets, and studied Cowper's blank verse, and betook himself to Thomson's Castle of Indolence, and sported with the wits of Charles the Second's days and of Queen Anne, and relished Swift's style and that of the John Bull (Arbuth- 20 not's we mean, not Mr. Croker's), and dallied with the British Essayists and Novelists, and knew all qualities of more modern writers with a learned spirit, Johnson, and Goldsmith, and Junius, and Burke, and Godwin, and the Sorrows of Werther, and Jean Jacques Rousseau, and Voltaire, and Marivaux, and Crebillon, and thousands more—now 'laughed with Rabelais in his easy chair' or pointed to Hogarth, or afterwards dwelt on Claude's classic scenes, or spoke with rapture of Raphael, and compared the women at Rome to figures that had walked out of his pictures, or 30 visited the Oratory of Pisa, and described the works of Giotto and Ghirlandaio and Massaccio, and gave the moral of the picture of the Triumph of Death, where the beggars and the wretched invoke his dreadful dart, but the rich and mighty of the earth quail and shrink before it; and in that land of siren sights and sounds, saw a dance of peasant girls, and was charmed with lutes and gondolas—or wandered into Germany and lost himself in the labyrinths of the Hartz Forest and of the Kantian philosophy, and amongst the cabalistic names of Fichte and Schelling and Lessing, and God knows who—this was long after, but all the former while, he had nerved his heart and filled his eyes with tears, as he hailed the rising orb of liberty, since quenched in darkness and in blood, and had kindled his 10 affections at the blaze of the French Revolution, and sang for joy when the towers of the Bastille and the proud places of the insolent and the oppressor fell, and would have floated his bark, freighted with fondest fancies, across the Atlantic wave with Southey and others to seek for peace and freedom—

In Philharmonia's undivided dale !

Alas ! ' Frailty, thy name is Genius ! '—What is become of all this mighty heap of hope, of thought, of learning, and humanity ? It has ended in swallowing doses of oblivion
 20 and in writing paragraphs in the Courier.—Such and so little is the mind of man !

It was not to be supposed that Mr. Coleridge could keep on at the rate he set off ; he could not realize all he knew or thought, and less could not fix his desultory ambition ; other stimulants supplied the place, and kept up the intoxicating dream, the fever and the madness of his early impressions. Liberty (the philosopher's and the poet's bride) had fallen a victim, meanwhile, to the murderous practices of the hag, Legitimacy. Proscribed by court-30 hirelings, too romantic for the herd of vulgar politicians, our enthusiast stood at bay, and at last turned on the pivot of a subtle casuistry to the unclean side : but his discursive reason would not let him trammel himself into a poet-laureate or stamp-distributor, and he stopped, ere he had quite passed that well-known 'bourne from whence no traveller returns'—and so has sunk into torpid, uneasy repose, tantalized by useless resources, haunted by vain imaginings, his lips idly moving, but his heart for ever still, or, as the shattered chords vibrate of themselves, making melancholy music to the ear of memory! Such is the fate of genius in an age, when in the unequal contest with sovereign wrong, every man is ground to powder who is not either a born slave, or who does not willingly and at once offer up the yearnings of humanity and the dictates of reason as a welcome sacrifice to besotted prejudice and loathsome power.

Of all Mr. Coleridge's productions, the Ancient Mariner is the only one that we could with confidence put into any person's hands, on whom we wished to impress a favourable idea of his extraordinary powers. Let whatever other objections be made to it, it is unquestionably a work of genius—of wild, irregular, overwhelming imagination, and has that rich, varied movement in the verse, which gives a distant idea of the lofty or changeful tones of Mr. Coleridge's voice. In the Christabel, there is one splendid passage on divided friendship. The Translation of Schiller's Wallenstein is also a masterly production in its kind, faithful and spirited. Among his smaller pieces there are occasional bursts of pathos and fancy, equal to what we might expect from him; but these form the exception, and not the rule. Such, for instance, is his affecting Sonnet to the author of the Robbers.

Schiller! that hour I would have wish'd to die,
 If through the shudd'ring midnight I had sent
 From the dark dungeon of the tower time-rent
 That fearful voice, a famish'd Father's cry—
 That in no after-moment aught less vast Might stamp me mortal! A triumphant shout
 Black horror scream'd, and all her goblin rout
 From the more with'ring scene diminish'd pass'd.

Ah! Bard tremendous in sublimity!

Could I behold thee in thy loftier mood,
Wand'ring at eve, with finely frenzied eye,
Beneath some vast old tempest-swinging wood!
Awhile, with mute awe gazing, I would brood,
Then weep aloud in a wild ecstasy.

His Tragedy, entitled Remorse, is full of beautiful and striking passages, but it does not place the author in the first rank of dramatic writers. But if Mr. Coleridge's works 10 do not place him in that rank, they injure instead of conveying a just idea of the man, for he himself is certainly in the first class of general intellect.

If our author's poetry is inferior to his conversation, his prose is utterly abortive. Hardly a gleam is to be found in it of the brilliancy and richness of those stores of thought and language that he pours out incessantly, when they are lost like drops of water in the ground. The principal work, in which he has attempted to embody his general views of things, is the FRIEND, of which, though it contains some 20 noble passages and fine trains of thought, prolixity and obscurity are the most frequent characteristics.

JEFFREY and COLERIDGE

From a note by Jeffrey in the Edinburgh Review, 1817

It was in 1810, I think, that I went with some of my near relations to Cumberland. I had previously been in some correspondence of a literary nature with Mr. C., though I had never seen him personally. Mr. Southey I had seen in the company of some common friends, both at Edinburgh and Keswick, a year or two before; and though he then knew me to be the reviewer of his Thalaba and Madoc, he undoubtedly treated me with much courtesy and politeness. I had heard, however, in the interim, that he had expressed himself on the subject of the Edinburgh Review with so 10 much bitterness, that I certainly should not have thought of intruding myself spontaneously into his company. When I came to Keswick, I had not the least idea that Mr. C. lived in Mr. Southey's house; and sent a note from the inn, saying, I should be glad to wait on him. He returned for answer, that he and Mr. Southey would be glad to see me. I thought it would be pitiful to decline this invitation; and went immediately. Mr. Southey received me with cold civility—and, being engaged with other visitors, I had very little conversation with him. 20 With Mr. C. I had a great deal; and was very much amused and interested. I believe coffee was offered me—and I came away in an hour or two. I did not see Mr. Southey afterwards. Next day, Mr. C. and I spent all the morning together in the fields—he did me the honour to dine with me at the inn—and next morning I left Keswick, and have not seen him since.

At this distance of time I do not pretend to recollect all that passed between us. I perfectly recollect, however, that I was much struck with the eloquence and poetical warmth 30 of his conversation; of which all my friends can testify that I have ever since been in the habit of speaking with admiration. I dare say I may have expressed that sentiment to him. Indeed, I remember, that when dissuading him from publishing on metaphysical subjects, I exhorted him rather to give us more poetry, and, upon his replying that it cost him more labour, I observed, that his whole talk to me that morning was poetry. I think I said also, that the verses entitled ' Love ' were the best in the Lyrical Ballads, and had always appeared to me extremely beautiful. These are the only compliments I can remember 10 paying him ; and they were paid with perfect sincerity. But it rather appeared to me that Mr. C. liked to receive compliments ; and I may have been led to gratify him in other instances. I cannot say I recollect of his telling me that he and his friends were of no school but that of good sense, &c. ; but I remember perfectly that he complained a good deal of my coupling his name with theirs in the Review, saying, that he had published no verses for a long time, and that his own style was very unlike theirs. I promised that I would take his name out of the firm for the future ; and 20 I kept my promise. We spoke too of Christabel, and I advised him to publish it ; but I did not say it was either the finest poem of the kind, or a fine poem at all ; and I am sure of this, for the best of all reasons, that at this time, and indeed till after it was published, I never saw or heard more than four or five lines of it, which my friend Mr. Scott once repeated to me. That eminent person, indeed, spoke favourably of it ; and I rather think I told Mr. C. that I had heard him say, that it was to it he was indebted for the first idea of that romantic narrative in irregular verse, 30 which he afterwards exemplified in his Lay of the Last Minstrel, and other works. In these circumstances, I felt a natural curiosity to see this great original ; and I can sincerely say, that no admirer of Mr. C. could be more disappointed or astonished than I was, when it did make its appearance.

DE QUINCEY'S

First Acquaintance with Coleridge

From Reminiscences of the Lake Poets, contributed to Tait's Magazine, September, 1834

IT was, I think, in the month of August, but certainly in the summer season, and certainly in the year 1807, that I first saw this illustrious man. My knowledge of him as a man of most original genius began about the year 1799. A little before that time Wordsworth had published the first edition (in a single volume) of the Lyrical Ballads, and into this had been introduced Mr. Coleridge's poem of the Ancient Mariner, as the contribution of an anonymous friend. It would be directing the reader's attention too much to myself if I were to linger upon this, the greatest 10 event in the unfolding of my own mind. Let me say, in one word, that, at a period when neither the one nor the other writer was valued by the public—both having a long warfare to accomplish of contumely and ridicule before they could rise into their present estimation—I found in these poems 'the ray of a new morning', and an absolute revelation of untrodden worlds teeming with power and beauty as yet unsuspected amongst men. I may here mention that, precisely at the same time, Professor Wilson, entirely unconnected with myself, and not even known to 20 me until ten years later, received the same startling and profound impressions from the same volume. With feelings of reverential interest, so early and so deep, pointing towards two contemporaries, it may be supposed that I inquired eagerly after their names. But these inquiries were self-baffled; the same deep feelings which prompted my curiosity causing me to recoil from all casual opportunities of pushing the inquiry, as too generally lying amongst those who gave no sign of participating in my feelings ; and, extravagant as this may seem, I revolted with as much hatred from coupling the question with any occasion of insult to the persons whom it respected as a primitive Christian from throwing frankincense upon the altars of Caesar, or a lover from giving up the name of his beloved to the coarse licence of a Bacchanalian party. It is laughable to record for how long a period my curiosity in this particular was thus self-defeated. Two years passed before 10 I ascertained the two names. Mr. Wordsworth published his in the second and enlarged edition of the poems ; and for Mr. Coleridge's I was ' indebted ' to a private source ; but I discharged that debt ill, for I quarrelled with my informant for what I considered his profane way of dealing with a subject so hallowed in my own thoughts. After this I searched, east and west, north and south, for all known works or fragments of the same authors. I had read, therefore, as respects Mr. Coleridge, the Allegory which he contributed to Mr. Southey's Joan of Arc. I had read his 20 fine Ode entitled France, his Ode to the Duchess of Devonshire, and various other contributions, more or less interesting, to the two volumes of the Anthology published at Bristol, about 1799-1800, by Mr. Southey ; and, finally, I had, of course, read the small volume of poems published under his own name. These, however, as a juvenile and immature collection, made expressly with a view to pecuniary profit, and therefore courting expansion at any cost of critical discretion, had in general greatly disappointed me.

30 I had received directions for finding out the house where Coleridge was visiting ; and, in riding down a main street of Bridgewater, I noticed a gateway corresponding to the description given me. Under this was standing, and gazing about him, a man whom I will describe. In height he might seem to be about five feet eight (he was, in reality, about an inch and a half taller, but his figure was of an order which drowns the height); his person was broad and full, and tended even to corpulence; his complexion was fair, though not what painters technically style fair, because it was associated with black hair; his eyes were large, and soft in their expression; and it was from the peculiar appearance of haze or dreaminess which mixed with their light that I recognized my object. This was Coleridge. I examined him steadfastly for a minute or more; and it 10 struck me that he saw neither myself nor any other object in the street. He was in a deep reverie; for I had dismounted, made two or three trifling arrangements at an inn-door, and advanced close to him, before he had apparently become conscious of my presence. The sound of my voice, announcing my own name, first awoke him; he started, and for a moment seemed at a loss to understand my purpose or his own situation; for he repeated rapidly a number of words which had no relation to either of us. There was no mauvaise honte in his manner, but simple 20 perplexity, and an apparent difficulty in recovering his position amongst daylight realities. This little scene over, he received me with a kindness of manner so marked that it might be called gracious. The hospitable family with whom he was domesticated were distinguished for their amiable manners and enlightened understandings: they were descendants from Chubb, the philosophic writer, and bore the same name. For Coleridge they all testified deep affection and esteem—sentiments in which the whole town of Bridgewater seemed to share; for in the evening, when 30 the heat of the day had declined, I walked out with him; and rarely, perhaps never, have I seen a person so much interrupted in one hour's space as Coleridge, on this occasion, by the courteous attentions of young and old.

All the people of station and weight in the place, and apparently all the ladies, were abroad to enjoy the lovely summer evening ; and not a party passed without some mark of smiling recognition, and the majority stopping to make personal inquiries about his health, and to express their anxiety that he should make a lengthened stay amongst them. Certain I am, from the lively esteem expressed towards Coleridge at this time by the people of Bridgewater, that a very large subscription might, in that town, have been raised to support him amongst them, in the 10 character of a lecturer, or philosophical professor. Especially I remarked that the young men of the place manifested the most liberal interest in all that concerned him.

Coleridge led me to a drawing-room, rang the bell for refreshments, and omitted no point of a courteous reception. He told me that there would be a very large dinner party on that day, which, perhaps, might be disagreeable to a perfect stranger ; but, if not, he could assure me of a most hospitable welcome from the family. I was too
20 anxious to see him under all aspects to think of declining this invitation. That point being settled, Coleridge, like some great river, the Orellana, or the St. Lawrence, that, having been checked and fretted by rocks or thwarting islands, suddenly recovers its volume of waters and its mighty music, swept at once, as if returning to his natural business, into a continuous strain of eloquent dissertation, certainly the most novel, the most finely illustrated, and traversing the most spacious fields of thought by transitions the most just and logical, that it was possible to conceive. What I mean by saying that his transitions were ' just ' is 30 by way of contradistinction to that mode of conversation which courts variety through links of verbal connexions. Coleridge, to many people, and often I have heard the complaint, seemed to wander ; and he seemed then to wander the most when, in fact, his resistance to the wandering instinct was greatest—viz., when the compass and huge circuit by which his illustrations moved travelled farthest into remote regions before they began to revolve. Long before this coming round commenced most people had lost him, and naturally enough supposed that he had lost himself. They continued to admire the separate beauty of the thoughts, but did not see their relations to the dominant theme. Had the conversation been thrown upon paper, it might have been easy to trace the continuity of the links ; just as in Bishop Berkeley's Siris, from a pedestal so low and abject, so culinary, as Tar Water, the method 10 of preparing it, and its medicinal effects, the dissertation ascends, like Jacob's ladder, by just gradations, into the Heaven of Heavens and the thrones of the Trinity. But Heaven is there connected with earth by the Homeric chain of gold ; and, being subject to steady examination, it is easy to trace the links ; whereas, in conversation, the loss of a single word may cause the whole cohesion to disappear from view. However, I can assert, upon my long and intimate knowledge of Coleridge's mind, that logic the most severe was as inalienable from his modes of thinking 20 as grammar from his language.

LAMB'S REFLECTIONS

On the Death of Coleridge

Written in the album of Mr. Keymer, a London bookseller, November 21, 1834; first printed in The New Monthly Magazine, February 1835

WHEN I heard of the death of Coleridge, it was without grief. It seemed to me that he long had been on the confines of the next world—that he had a hunger for eternity. I grieved then that I could not grieve. But since, I feel how great a part he was of me. His great and dear spirit haunts me. I cannot think a thought, I cannot make a criticism on men or books, without an ineffectual turning and reference to him. He was the proof and touchstone of all my cogitations. He was a Grecian (or in the first 10 form) at Christ's Hospital, where I was deputy Grecian; and the same subordination and deference to him I have preserved through a life-long acquaintance. Great in his writings, he was greatest in his conversation. In him was disproved that old maxim, that we should allow every one his share of talk. He would talk from morn to dewy eve, nor cease till far midnight, yet who ever would interrupt him—who would obstruct that continuous flow of converse, fetched from Helicon or Zion? He had the tact of making the unintelligible seem plain. Many who read the abstruser 20 parts of his Friend would complain that his works did not answer to his spoken wisdom. They were identical. But he had a tone in oral delivery, which seemed to convey sense to those who were otherwise imperfect recipients. He was my fifty years old friend without a dissension. Never saw I his likeness, nor probably the world can see again. I seem to love the house he died at more passionately than when he lived. I love the faithful Gilmans more than while they exercised their virtues towards him living. What was his mansion is consecrated to me a chapel.

LEIGH HUNT

On Coleridge

From Hunt's Autobiography, 1850, chap. xvi

COLERIDGE was as little fitted for action as Lamb, but on a different account. His person was of a good height, but as sluggish and solid as the other's was light and fragile. He had, perhaps, suffered it to look old before its time, for want of exercise. His hair was white at fifty; and as he generally dressed in black, and had a very tranquil demeanour, his appearance was gentlemanly, and for several years before his death was reverend. Nevertheless, there was something invincibly young in the look of his face. It was round and fresh-coloured, with agreeable features, and an open, indolent, good-natured mouth. This boy-like expression was very becoming in one who dreamed and speculated as he did when he was really a boy, and who passed his life apart from the rest of the world, with a book, and his flowers. His forehead was prodigious—a great piece of placid marble; and his fine eyes, in which all the activity of his mind seemed to concentrate, moved under it with a sprightly ease, as if it was pastime to them to carry all that thought. 10

I fancied him a good-natured wizard, very fond of earth, 20 and conscious of reposing with weight enough in his easy chair, but able to conjure his etherealities about him in the twinkling of an eye. He could also change them by thousands, and dismiss them as easily when his dinner came. It was a mighty intellect put upon a sensual body; and the reason why he did little more with it than talk and dream was, that it is agreeable to such a body to do little else. I do not mean that Coleridge was a sensualist in an ill sense. He was capable of too many innocent pleasures to take any pleasure in the way that a man of 30 the world would take it. The idlest things he did would have had a warrant. But if all the senses, in their time, did not find lodging in that humane plenitude of his, never believe that they did in Thomson or in Boccaccio.

Coleridge was fat, and began to lament, in very delightful verses, that he was getting infirm. There was no old age in his verses. I heard him one day, under the Grove at Highgate, repeat one of his melodious lamentations, as he walked up and down, his voice undulating in a stream of music, and his regrets of youth sparkling with visions ever
10 young. At the same time, he did me the honour to show me that he did not think so ill of all modern liberalism as some might suppose, denouncing the pretensions of the money-getting in a style which I should hardly venture upon, and never could equal ; and asking with a triumphant eloquence what chastity itself was worth, if it were a casket, not to keep love in, but hate, and strife, and worldliness ? On the same occasion, he built up a metaphor out of a flower, in a style surpassing the famous passage in Milton ; deducing it from its root in religious mystery,
20 and carrying it up into the bright, consummate flower, ' the bridal chamber of reproductiveness.' Of all ' the Muse's mysteries ', he was as great a high-priest as Spenser ; and Spenser himself might have gone to Highgate to hear him talk, and thank him for his Ancient Mariner. His voice did not always sound very sincere ; but perhaps the humble and deprecating tone of it, on those occasions, was out of consideration for the infirmities of his hearers, rather than produced by his own. He recited his Kubla Khan one morning to Lord Byron, in his lordship's house
30 in Piccadilly, when I happened to be in another room. I remember the other's coming away from him, highly struck with his poem, and saying how wonderfully he talked. This was the impression of everybody who heard him.

It is no secret that Coleridge lived in the Grove at Highgate with a friendly family, who had sense and kindness enough to know that they did themselves honour by looking after the comfort of such a man. His room looked upon a delicious prospect of wood and meadow, with coloured gardens under the window, like an embroidery to the mantle. I thought, when I first saw it, that he had taken up his dwelling-place like an abbot. Here he cultivated his flowers, and had a set of birds for his pensioners, who came to breakfast with him. He might have been seen taking his daily stroll up and down, with his black 10 coat and white locks, and a book in his hand ; and was a great acquaintance of the little children. His main occupation, I believe, was reading. He loved to read old folios, and to make old voyages with Purchas and Marco Polo ; the seas being in good visionary condition, and the vessel well stocked with botargoes.

CARLYLE on Coleridge

From the Life of Sterling, 1851

COLERIDGE sat on the brow of Highgate Hill, in those years, looking down on London and its smoke-tumult, like a sage escaped from the inanity of life's battle ; attracting towards him the thoughts of innumerable brave souls still engaged there. His express contributions to poetry, philosophy, or any specific province of human literature or enlightenment, had been small and sadly intermittent ; but he had, especially among young inquiring men, a higher than literary, a kind of prophetic or magician, character. He was thought to hold, he alone in England, the key of German and other Transcendentalisms ; knew the sublime secret of believing by ' the reason ' what ' the understanding ' had been obliged to fling out as incredible ; and could still, after Hume and Voltaire had done their best and worst with him, profess himself an orthodox Christian, and say and print to the Church of England, with its singular old rubrics and surplices at Allhallowtide, Esto perpetua. A sublime man ; who, alone in those dark days, had saved his crown of spiritual manhood ; escaping from the black materialisms, and revolutionary deluges, with ' God, Freedom, Immortality ' still his : a king of men. The practical intellects of the world did not much heed him, or carelessly reckoned him a metaphysical dreamer : but to the rising spirits of the young generation he had this dusky sublime character ; and sat there as a kind of Magus, girt in mystery and enigma ; his Dodona oak-grove (Mr. Gilman's house at Highgate) whispering strange things, uncertain whether oracles or jargon.

The Gilmans did not encourage much company, or exci-tation of any sort, round their sage ; nevertheless access to him, if a youth did reverently wish it, was not difficult. He would stroll about the pleasant garden with you, sit in the pleasant rooms of the place—perhaps take you to his own peculiar room, high up, with a rearward view, which was the chief view of all. A really, charming outlook in fine weather. Close at hand, wide sweep of flowery leafy gardens, their few houses mostly hidden, the very chimney-pots veiled under blossomy umbrage, flowed gloriously down hill ; gloriously issuing in wide-tufted undulating plain- 10 country, rich in all charms of field and town. Waving blooming country of the brightest green ; dotted all over with handsome villas, handsome groves ; crossed by roads and human traffic, here inaudible or heard only as a musical hum : and behind all swam, under olive-tinted haze, the illimitable liminary ocean of London, with its domes and steeples definite in the sun, big Paul's and the many memories attached to it hanging high over all. Nowhere, of its kind, could you see a grander prospect on a bright summer day, with the set of the air going southward—southward, 20 and so draping with the city-smoke not you but the city. Here for hours would Coleridge talk, concerning all conceivable or inconceivable things ; and liked nothing better than to have an intelligent, or failing that, even a silent and patient human listener. He distinguished himself to all that ever heard him as at least the most surprising talker extant in this world—and to some small minority, by no means to all, as the most excellent.

The good man, he was now getting old, towards sixty perhaps ; and gave you the idea of a life that had been full 30 of sufferings ; a life heavy-laden, half-vanquished, still swimming painfully in seas of manifold physical and other bewilderment. Brow and head were round, and of massive weight, but the face was flabby and irresolute. The deep eyes, of a light hazel, were as full of sorrow as of inspiration ;

- confused pain looked mildly from them, as in a kind of mild astonishment. The whole figure and air, good and amiable otherwise, might be called flabby and irresolute ; expressive of weakness under possibility of strength. He hung loosely on his limbs, with knees bent, and stooping attitude ; in walking, he rather shuffled than decisively stepped ; and a lady once remarked, he never could fix which side of the garden walk would suit him best, but continually shifted, in corkscrew fashion, and kept trying both.
- 10 A heavy-laden, high-aspiring and surely much-suffering man. His voice, naturally soft and good, had contracted itself into a plaintive snuffle and singsong ; he spoke as if preaching—you would have said, preaching earnestly and also hopelessly the weightiest things. I still recollect his ‘ object ’ and ‘ subject ’, terms of continual recurrence in the Kantean province ; and how he sang and snuffled them into ‘ om-m-mject ’ and ‘ sum-m-mject ’, with a kind of solemn shake or quaver, as he rolled along. No talk, in his century or in any other, could be more surprising.
- 20 Sterling, who assiduously attended him, with profound reverence, and was often with him by himself, for a good many months, gives a record of their first colloquy. Their colloquies were numerous, and he had taken note of many ; but they are all gone to the fire, except this first, which Mr. Hare has printed—unluckily without date. It contains a number of ingenious, true and half-true observations, and is of course a faithful epitome of the things said ; but it gives small idea of Coleridge’s way of talking—this one feature is perhaps the most recognizable, ‘ Our interview lasted for
- 30 three hours, during which he talked two hours and three quarters.’ Nothing could be more copious than his talk ; and furthermore it was always, virtually or literally, of the nature of a monologue ; suffering no interruption, however reverent ; hastily putting aside all foreign additions, annotations, or most ingenuous desires for elucidation, as well-meant superfluities which would never do. Besides, it was talk not flowing anywhither like a river, but spreading everywhither in inextricable currents and regurgitations like a lake or sea ; terribly deficient in definite goal or aim, nay often in logical intelligibility ; what you were to believe or do, on any earthly or heavenly thing, obstinately refusing to appear from it. So that, most times, you felt logically lost ; swamped near to drowning in this tide of ingenious vocables, spreading out boundless as if to submerge the world.

His talk, alas, was distinguished, like himself, by irresolution : it disliked to be troubled with conditions, abstinences, definite fulfilments—loved to wander at its own sweet will, and make its auditor and his claims and humble wishes a mere passive bucket for itself ! He had knowledge about many things and topics, much curious reading ; but generally all topics led him, after a pass or two, into the high seas of theosophic philosophy, the hazy infinitude of Kantian transcendentalism, with its ‘ sum-m-mjects ’ and ‘ om-m-mjects ’. Sad enough ; for with such indolent im- 20 patience of the claims and ignorances of others, he had not the least talent for explaining this or anything unknown to them ; and you swam and fluttered in the mistiest wide unintelligible deluge of things, for most part in a rather profitless uncomfortable manner.

Glorious islets, too, I have seen rise out of the haze ; but they were few, and soon swallowed in the general element again. Balmy sunny islets, islets of the blest and the intelligible—on which occasions those secondary humming groups would all cease humming, and hang breathless upon 30 the eloquent words ; till once your islet got wrapt in the mist again, and they could recommence humming. Eloquent artistically expressive words you always had ; piercing radiances of a most subtle insight came at intervals ; tones of noble pious sympathy, recognizable as pious though strangely coloured, were never wanting long : but in general you could not call this aimless, cloudcapped, cloudbased, lawlessly meandering human discourse of reason by the name of 'excellent talk', but only of 'surprising'; and were reminded bitterly of Hazlitt's account of it : 'Excellent talker, very—if you let him start from no premises and come to no conclusion.' Coleridge was not without what talkers call wit, and there were touches of prickly sarcasm in him, contemptuous enough of the world and its idols and 10 popular dignitaries ; he had traits even of poetic humour ; but in general he seemed deficient in laughter ; or indeed in sympathy for concrete human things either on the sunny or on the stormy side. One right peal of concrete laughter at some convicted flesh-and-blood absurdity, one burst of noble indignation at some injustice or depravity, rubbing elbows with us on this solid Earth, how strange would it have been in that Kantian haze-world, and how infinitely cheering amid its vacant air-castles and dim-melting ghosts and shadows ! None such ever came. His life had been 20 an abstract thinking and dreaming, idealistic, passed amid the ghosts of defunct bodies and of unborn ones. The moaning singsong of that theosophico-metaphysical monotony left on you, at last, a very dreary feeling.

Let me not be unjust to this memorable man. Surely there was here, in his pious, ever-labouring, subtle mind, a precious truth, or prefigurement of truth ; and yet a fatal delusion withal. Prefigurement that, in spite of beaver sciences and temporary spiritual hebetude and cecity, man and his Universe were eternally divine ; and that no past 30 nobleness, or revelation of the divine, could or would ever be lost to him. Most true, surely, and worthy of all acceptance. Good also to do what you can with old Churches and practical Symbols of the Noble : nay quit not the burnt ruins of them while you find there is still gold to be dug there. But, on the whole, do not think you can, by logical alchymy, distil astral spirits from them ; or if you could, that said astral spirits, or defunct logical phantasms, could serve you in anything. What the light of your mind, which is the direct inspiration of the Almighty, pronounces incredible—that, in God's name, leave uncredited ; at your peril do not try believing that. No subtlest hocus-pocus of ' reason ' versus ' understanding ' will avail for that feat—and it is terribly perilous to try it in these provinces !

The truth is, I now see, Coleridge's talk and speculation was the emblem of himself : in it as in him, a ray of heavenly inspiration struggled, in a tragically ineffectual degree, with the weakness of flesh and blood. He says once, he ' had skirted the howling deserts of Infidelity ' ; this was evident enough : but he had not had the courage, in defiance of pain and terror, to press resolutely across said deserts to the new firm lands of Faith beyond ; he preferred to create logical fatamorganas for himself on this hither side, and laboriously solace himself with these.

To the man himself Nature had given, in high measure, the seeds of a noble endowment ; and to unfold it had been forbidden him. A subtle lynx-eyed intellect, tremulous pious sensibility to all good and all beautiful ; truly a ray of empyrean light--but imbedded in such weak laxity of character, in such indolences and esuriences as had made strange work with it. Once more, the tragic story of a high endowment with an insufficient will. An eye to discern the divineness of the Heaven's splendours and lightnings, the insatiable wish to revel in their godlike radiances and brilliances ; but no heart to front the scathing terrors of them, which is the first condition of your conquering an abiding place there. The courage necessary for him, above all things, had been denied this man. His life, with such ray of the empyrean in it, was great and terrible to him ; and he had not valiantly grappled with it, he had fled from it ; sought refuge in vague day-dreams, hollow compromises, in opium, in theosophic metaphysics. Harsh pain, danger, necessity, slavish harnessed toil, were of all things abhorrent to him. And so the empyrean element, lying smothered under the terrene, and yet inextinguishable there, made sad writhings. For pain, danger, difficulty, steady slaving toil, and other highly disagreeable behests of destiny, shall in no wise be shirked by any brightest mortal that will approve himself loyal to his mission in this world ; nay precisely the higher he is, the deeper will be the disagree-10 ableness, and the detestability to flesh and blood, of the tasks laid on him ; and the heavier too, and more tragic, his penalties if he neglect them.

For the old Eternal Powers do live forever ; nor do their laws know any change, however we in our poor wigs and church-tippets may attempt to read their laws. To steal into Heaven—by the modern method, of sticking ostrich-like your head into fallacies on Earth, equally as by the ancient and by all conceivable methods—is forever forbidden. High-treason is the name of that attempt ; and it 20 continues to be punished as such. Strange enough : here once more was a kind of Heaven-scaling Ixion ; and to him, as to the old one, the just gods were very stern ! The ever-revolving, never-advancing Wheel (of a kind) was his, through life ; and from his Cloud-Juno did not he too procreate strange Centaurs, spectral Puseyisms, monstrous illusory Hybrids, and ecclesiastical Chimeras—which now roam the earth in a very lamentable manner !

EMERSON'S Visit to Coleridge

From English Trails, 1856

FROM London, on the 5th August, I went to Highgate, and wrote a note to Mr. Coleridge, requesting leave to pay my respects to him. It was near noon. Mr. Coleridge sent a verbal message, that he was in bed, but if I would call after one o'clock, he would see me. I returned at one, and he appeared, a short, thick old man, with bright blue eyes and fine clear complexion, leaning on his cane. He took snuff freely, which presently soiled his cravat and neat black suit. He asked whether I knew Allston, and spoke warmly of his merits and doings when he knew him in Rome; what 10 a master of the Titianesque he was, &c., &c. He spoke of Dr. Channing. It was an unspeakable misfortune that he should have turned out a Unitarian after all. On this, he burst into a declamation on the folly and ignorance of Unitarianism—its high unreasonableness; and taking up Bishop Waterland's book, which lay on the table, he read with vehemence two or three pages written by himself in the fly-leaves—passages, too, which, I believe, are printed in the Aids to Reflection. When he stopped to take breath, I interposed, that, 'whilst I highly valued all his explana- 20 tions, I was bound to tell him that I was born and bred a Unitarian.' 'Yes,' he said, 'I supposed so'; and continued as before. 'It was a wonder, that after so many ages of unquestioning acquiescence in the doctrine of St. Paul—the doctrine of the Trinity, which was also, according to Philo Judaeus, the doctrine of the Jews before Christ—this handful of Priestleians should take on themselves to deny it, &c., &c. He was very sorry that Dr. Channing—a man to whom he looked up—no, to say that he looked up to him would be to speak falsely; but 30 a man whom he looked at with so much interest—should embrace such views. When he saw Dr. Channing, he had hinted to him that he was afraid he loved Christianity for what was lovely and excellent—he loved the good in it, and not the true ; ‘ and I tell you, sir, that I have known ten persons who loved the good, for one person who loved the true ; but it is a far greater virtue to love the true for itself alone, than to love the good for itself alone.’ He (Coleridge) knew all about Unitarianism perfectly well, 10 because he had once been a Unitarian, and knew what quackery it was. He had been called ‘ the rising star of Unitarianism ’. He went on defining, or rather refining : ‘ The Trinitarian doctrine was realism ; the idea of God was not essential, but super-essential ’ ; talked of trinism and tetrakism, and much more, of which I only caught this : ‘ that the will was that by which a person is a person ; because, if one should push me in the street, and so I should force the man next me into the kennel, I should at once exclaim, “ I did not do it, sir,” meaning it was not my will.’ 20 And this also : ‘ that if you should insist on your faith here in England, and I on mine, mine would be the hotter side of the faggot.’

I took advantage of a pause to say, that he had many readers of all religious opinions in America, and I proceeded to inquire if the ‘ extract ’ from the Independent’s pamphlet, in the third volume of the Friend, were a veritable quotation. He replied that it was really taken from a pamphlet in his possession, entitled ‘ A Protest of one of the Independents ’, or something to that effect. I told him how 30 excellent I thought it, and how much I wished to see the entire work. ‘ Yes,’ he said, ‘ the man was a chaos of truths, but lacked the knowledge that God was a god of order. Yet the passage would no doubt strike you more in the quotation than in the original, for I have filtered it.’

When I rose to go, he said, ‘ I do not know whether you care about poetry, but I will repeat some verses I lately made on my baptismal anniversary ' ; and he recited with strong emphasis, standing, ten or twelve lines, beginning :

Born unto God in Christ——

He inquired where I had been travelling ; and on learning that I had been in Malta and Sicily, he compared one island with the other, ' repeating what he had said to the Bishop of London when he returned from that country, that Sicily was an excellent school of political economy ; for, in any town there, it only needed to ask what the government enacted, and reverse that to know what ought to be done ; it was the most felicitously opposite legislation to anything good and wise. There were only three things which the government had brought into that garden of delights, namely, itch, pox, and famine ; whereas, in Malta, the force of law and mind was seen, in making that barren rock of semi-Saracen inhabitants the seat of population and plenty.' Going out, he showed me in the next apartment a picture of Allston's, and told me ' that Montague, a picture-dealer, once came to see him, and, glancing 20 towards this, said, " Well, you have got a picture ! ", thinking it the work of an old master ; afterwards, Montague, still talking with his back to the canvas, put up his hand and touched it, and exclaimed, " By Heaven ! this picture is not ten years old "—so delicate and skilful was that man's touch.'

I was in his company for about an hour, but find it impossible to recall the largest part of his discourse, which was often like so many printed paragraphs in his book—perhaps the same—so readily did he fall into certain 30 commonplaces. As I might have foreseen, the visit was rather a spectacle than a conversation, of no use beyond the satisfaction of my curiosity. He was old and pre-occupied, and could not bend to a new companion and think with him.

PATER ON COLERIDGE

From Essay on Coleridge's Writings, 1860

‘FROM his childhood he hungered for eternity.’ After all, that is the incontestable claim of Coleridge. The perfect flower of any elementary type of life must always be precious to humanity, and Coleridge is the perfect flower of the romantic type. More than Childe Harold, more than Werther, more than René, Coleridge, by what he did, what he was, and what he failed to do, represents that inexhaustible discontent, languor, and home-sickness, the chords of which ring all through our modern literature.

10 Criticism may still discuss the claims of classical and romantic art, or literature, or sentiment; and perhaps one day we may come to forget the horizon, with full knowledge to be content with what is here and now; and that is the essence of classical feeling. But by us of the present moment, by us for whom the Greek spirit, with its engaging naturalness, simple, chastened, debonair, τρυφής, ἀβρότης, χλιδής, χαρίτων, ἡμέρου πόθου πατήρ, is itself the Sangraal of an endless pilgrimage, Coleridge, with his passion for the absolute, for something fixed where all is moving, his 20 faintness, his broken memory, his intellectual disquiet, may still be ranked among the interpreters of one of the constituent elements of our life.

Selections from COLERIDGE'S
POETRY and PROSE

Songs of the Pixies

Composed 1793.—Published in Poems on Various Subjects, 1796

I

WHOM the untaught Shepherds call
 Pixies in their madrigal,
 Fancy's children, here we dwell :
 Welcome, Ladies ! to our cell.
 Here the wren of softest note 5
 Builds its nest and warbles well ;
 Here the blackbird strains his throat ;
 Welcome, Ladies ! to our cell.

II

When fades the moon to shadowy-pale,
 And scuds the cloud before the gale, 10
 Ere the Morn all gem-bedight
 Hath streak'd the East with rosy light,
 We sip the furze-flower's fragrant dews
 Clad in robes of rainbow hues ;
 Or sport amid the shooting gleams 15
 To the tune of distant-tinkling teams,
 While lusty Labour scouting sorrow
 Bids the Dame a glad good-morrow,
 Who jogs the accustom'd road along,
 And paces cheery to her cheering song. 20

III

But not our filmy pinion
 We scorch amid the blaze of day,
 When Noontide's fiery-tresséd minion
 Flashes the fervid ray.

Aye from the sultry heat 25
 We to the cave retreat
 O'er-canopied by huge roots intertwin'd
 With wildest texture, blacken'd o'er with age :
 Round them their mantle green the ivies bind,
 Beneath whose foliage pale 30
 Fann'd by the unfrequent gale
 We shield us from the Tyrant's mid-day rage.

IV

Thither, while the murmuring throng
 Of wild-bees hum their drowsy song,
 By Indolence and Fancy brought, 35
 A youthful Bard, 'unknown to Fame,'
 Wooes the Queen of Solemn Thought,
 And heaves the gentle misery of a sigh
 Gazing with tearful eye,
 As round our sandy grot appear 40
 Many a rudely-sculptur'd name
 To pensive Memory dear !
 Weaving gay dreams of sunny-tinctur'd hue,
 We glance before his view ;
 O'er his hush'd soul our soothing witcheries shed 45
 And twine the future garland round his head.

V

When Evening's dusky car
 Crown'd with her dewy star
 Steals o'er the fading sky in shadowy flight ;
 On leaves of aspen trees 50
 We tremble to the breeze
 Veil'd from the grosser ken of mortal sight.
 Or, haply, at the visionary hour,
 Along our wildly-bower'd sequester'd walk,
 We listen to the enamour'd rustic's talk : 55

Heave with the heavings of the maiden's breast,
 Where young-eyed Loves have hid their turtle nest ;
 Or guide of soul-subduing power
 The glance that from the half-confessing eye
 Darts the fond question or the soft reply. 60

VI

Or through the mystic ringlets of the vale
 We flash our faery feet in gamesome prank ;
 Or, silent-sandal'd, pay our defter court,
 Circling the Spirit of the Western Gale,
 Where wearied with his flower-caressing sport, 65
 Supine he slumbers on a violet bank ;
 Then with quaint music hymn the parting gleam
 By lonely Otter's sleep-persuading stream ;
 Or where his wave with loud unquiet song
 Dash'd o'er the rocky channel froths along ; 70
 Or where, his silver waters smooth'd to rest,
 The tall tree's shadow sleeps upon his breast.

VII

• Hence thou lingerer, Light !
 Eve saddens into Night.
 Mother of wildly-working dreams ! we view
 The sombre hours, that round thee stand
 With down-cast eyes (a duteous band !)
 Their dark robes dripping with the heavy dew.
 Sorceress of the ebony throne !
 Thy power the Pixies own,
 When round thy raven brow
 Heaven's lucent roses glow,
 And clouds in watery colours drest
 Float in light drapery o'er thy sable vest :

What time the pale moon sheds a softer day 85
 Mellowing the woods beneath its pensive beam :
 For mid the quivering light 'tis ours to play,
 Aye dancing to the cadence of the stream.

VIII.

 Welcome, Ladies ! to the cell
 Where the blameless Pixies dwell : 90
 But thou, Sweet Nymph ! proclaim'd our Faery Queen,
 With what obeisance meet
 Thy presence shall we greet ?
 For lo ! attendant on thy steps are seen
 Graceful Ease in artless stole, 95
 And white-robed Purity of soul,
 With Honour's softer mien ;
 Mirth of the loosely-flowing hair,
 And meek-eyed Pity eloquently fair,
 Whose tearful cheeks are lovely to the view, 100
 As snow-drop wet with dew.

IX

Unboastful Maid ! though now the Lily pale Transparent grace thy beauties meek ;
 Yet ere again along the impurpling vale,
 The purpling vale and elfin-haunted grove, 105
 Young Zephyr his fresh flowers profusely throws,
 We'll tinge with livelier hues thy cheek ;
 And, haply, from the nectar-breathing Rose Extract a Blush for Love !

Domestic Peace

TELL me, on what holy ground
May Domestic Peace be found ?
Halcyon daughter of the skies,
Far on fearful wings she flies,
From the pomp of Sceptered State, 5
From the Rebel's noisy hate.

In a cottag'd vale She dwells,
Listening to the Sabbath bells !
Still around her steps are seen
Spotless Honour's meeker mien, 10
Love, the sire of pleasing fears,
Sorrow smiling through her tears,
And conscious of the past employ
Memory, bosom-spring of joy.

To a Young Ass

ITS MOTHER BEING TETHERED NEAR IT

Published in The Morning Chronicle, 30 December 1794 ; included in Poems, 1796

Poor little Fool of an oppressed race !
I love the languid patience of thy face :
And oft with gentle hand I give thee bread,
And clap thy ragged coat, and pat thy head.
But what thy dulled spirits hath dismay'd, 5
That never thou dost sport along the glade ?
And (most unlike the nature of things young)
That earthward still thy moveless head is hung ?
Do thy prophetic fears anticipate,
Meek Child of Misery ! thy future fate ? 10
The starving meal, and all the thousand aches
' Which patient Merit of the Unworthy takes ' ?
Or is thy sad heart thrill'd with filial pain
To see thy wretched mother's shorten'd chain ?
And truly, very piteous is her lot— 15
Chain'd to a log within a narrow spot,
Where the close-eaten grass is scarcely seen,
While sweet around her waves the tempting green !

Poor Ass ! thy master should have learnt to show
Pity—best taught by fellowship of Woe ! 20
For much I fear me that He lives like thee,
Half famish'd in a land of Luxury !
How askingly its footsteps hither bend ?
It seems to say, ' And have I then one friend ? '
Innocent-foal ! thou poor despis'd forlorn ! 25
I hail thee Brother—spite of the fool's scorn !

And fain would take thee with me, in the Dell
 Of Peace and mild Equality to dwell,
 Where Toil shall call the charmer Health his bride,
 And Laughter tickle Plenty's ribless side ! 30
 How thou wouldst toss thy heels in gamesome play,
 And frisk about, as lamb or kitten gay !
 Yea ! and more musically sweet to me
 Thy dissonant harsh bray of joy would be,
 Than warbled melodies that soothe to rest 35
 The aching of pale Fashion's vacant breast !

REFLECTIONS

On having left a Place of Retirement

Sermoni propria.—HOR.

Low was our pretty Cot : our tallest Rose
 Peep'd at the chamber-window. We could hear
 At silent noon, and eve, and early morn,
 The Sea's faint murmur. In the open air
 Our Myrtles blossom'd ; and across the porch 5
 Thick Jasmins twined : the little landscape round
 Was green and woody, and refresh'd the eye.
 It was a spot which you might aptly call
 The Valley of Seclusion ! Once I saw (Hallowing his Sabbath-day by quietness) 10
 A wealthy son of Commerce saunter by,
 Bristow's citizen : methought, it calm'd
 His thirst of idle gold, and made him muse
 With wiser feelings : for he paus'd, and look'd
 With a pleas'd sadness, and gaz'd all around, 15
 Then eyed our Cottage, and gaz'd round again,

And sigh'd, and said, it was a Blesséd Place.
 And we were bless'd. Oft with patient ear
 Long-listening to the viewless sky-lark's note (Viewless, or haply for a moment seen 20 Gleaming on sunny wings) in whisper'd tones
 I've said to my Belovéd, ' Such, sweet Girl !
 The inobtrusive song of Happiness,
 Uncarthy minstrelsy ! then only heard
 When the Soul seeks to hear ; wher. all is hush'd, 25
 And the Heart listens ! '

But the time, when first
 From that low Dell, steep up the stony Mount
 I climb'd with perilous toil and reach'd the top,
 Oh ! what a goodly scene ! Here the bleak mount,
 The bare bleak mountain speckled thin with sheep ; 30
 Grey clouds, that shadowing spot the sunny fields ;
 And river, now with bushy rocks o'er-brow'd,
 Now winding bright and full, with naked banks ;
 And seats, and lawns, the Abbey and the wood,
 And cots, and hamlets, and faint city-spire ; 35
 The Channel there, the Islands and white sails,
 Dim coasts, and cloud-like hills, and shoreless Ocean—
 It seem'd like Omnipresence ! God, methought,
 Had built him there a Temple : the whole World
 Seem'd imag'd in its vast circumference : 40
 No wish profan'd my overwhelméd heart.
 Blest hour ! It was a luxury,—to be !

Ah ! quiet Dell ! dear Cot, and Mount sublime !
 I was constrain'd to quit you. Was it right,
 While my unnumber'd brethren toil'd and bled, 45
 That I should dream away the entrusted hours
 On rose-leaf beds, pampering the coward heart
 With feelings all too delicate for use ?
 Sweet is the tear that from some Howard's eye

Drops on the cheek of one he lifts from earth : 50
 And he that works me good with unmov'd face,
 Does it but half : he chills me while he aids,
 My benefactor, not my brother man !
 Yet even this, this cold beneficence
 Praise, praise it, O my Soul ! oft as thou scann'st 55
 The sluggard Pity's vision-weaving tribe !
 Who sigh for Wretchedness, yet shun the Wretched,
 Nursing in some delicious solitude
 Their slothful loves and dainty sympathies !
 I therefore go, and join head, heart, and hand, 60
 Active and firm, to fight the bloodless fight
 Of Science, Freedom, and the Truth in Christ.

Yet oft when after honourable toil
 Rests the tir'd mind, and waking loves to dream,
 My spirit shall revisit thee, dear Cot ! 65
 Thy Jasmin and thy window-peeping Rose,
 And Myrtles fearless of the mild sea-air.
 And I shall sigh fond wishes—sweet Abode !
 Ah !—had none greater ! And that all had such !
 It might be so—but the time is not yet. 70
 Speed it, O Father ! Let thy Kingdom come !

Notus in fratres animi paterni.

HOR. Carm. lib. II. 2.

A BLESSÉD lot hath he, who having passed
His youth and early manhood in the stir
And turmoil of the world, retreats at length,
With cares that move, not agitate the heart,
To the same dwelling where his father dwelt ; 5
And haply views his tottering little ones
Embrace those agéd knees and climb that lap,
On which first kneeling his own infancy
Lisp'd its brief prayer. Such, O my earliest Friend !
Thy lot, and such thy brothers too enjoy. 10
At distance did ye climb Life's upland road,
Yet cheer'd and cheering : now fraternal love
Hath drawn you to one centre. Be your days
Holy, and blest and blessing may ye live !

To me the Eternal Wisdom hath dispens'd 15
A different fortune and more different mind—
Me from the spot where first I sprang to light
Too soon transplanted, ere my soul had fix'd
Its first domestic loves ; and hence through life
Chasing chance-started friendships. A brief while 20
Some have preserv'd me from life's pelting ills ;
But, like a tree with leaves of feeble stem,
If the clouds lasted, and a sudden breeze
Ruffled the boughs, they on my head at once
Dropped the collected shower ; and some most false, 25
False and fair-foliag'd as the Manchincel,
Have tempted me to slumber in their shade

E'en mid the storm ; then breathing subtlest damps,
 Mix'd their own venom with the rain from Heaven,
 That I woke poison'd ! But, all praise to Him 30
 Who gives us all things, more have yielded me
 Permanent shelter ; and beside one Friend,
 Beneath the impervious covert of one oak,
 I've rais'd a lowly shed, and know the names
 Of Husband and of Father ; not unhearing 35
 Of that divine and nightly-whispering Voice,
 Which from my childhood to maturer years
 Spake to me of predestinated wreaths,
 Bright with no fading colours !

Yet at times

My soul is sad, that I have roam'd through life 40
 Still most a stranger, most with naked heart
 At mine own home and birth-place : chiefly then,
 When I remember thee, my earliest Friend !
 Thee, who didst watch my boyhood and my youth ;
 Didst trace my wanderings with a father's eye ; 45
 And boding evil yet still hoping good,
 Rebuk'd each fault, and over all my woes
 Sorrow'd in silence ! He who counts alone
 The beatings of the solitary heart,
 That Being knows, how I have lov'd thee ever, 50
 Lov'd as a brother, as a son rever'd thee !
 Oh ! 'tis to me an ever new delight,
 To talk of thee and thine : or when the blast
 Of the shrill winter, rattling our rude sash,
 Endears the cleanly hearth and social bowl ; 55
 Or when, as now, on some delicious eve,
 We in our sweet sequester'd orchard-plot
 Sit on the tree crook'd earth-ward ; whose old boughs,
 That hang above us in an arborous roof,
 Stirr'd by the faint gale of departing May, 60
 Send their loose blossoms slanting o'er our heads !

Nor dost not thou sometimes recall those hours,
 When with the joy of hope thou gavest thine ear
 To my wild firstling-lays. Since then my song
 Hath sounded deeper notes, such as beseem 65
 Or that sad wisdom folly leaves behind,
 Or such as, tuned to these tumultuous times,
 Cope with the tempest's swell !

These various strains
 Which I have fram'd in many a various mood, Accept, my Brother ! and (for some perchance 70
 Will strike discordant on thy milder mind)
 If aught of error or intemperate truth
 Should meet thine ear, think thou that riper Age
 Will calm it down, and let thy love forgive it !

This Lime-tree Bower my Prison

Composed 1797.—Published in The Annual Anthology, 1800 ;
 included in Sibylline Leaves, 1817

In the June of 1797 some long-expected friends paid a visit to the author's cottage ; and on the morning of their arrival, he met with an accident, which disabled him from walking during the whole time of their stay. One evening, when they had left him for a few hours, he composed the following lines in the garden-bower.

WELL, they are gone, and here must I remain,
 This lime-tree bower my prison ! I have lost Beauties and feelings, such as would have been Most sweet to my remembrance even when age
 Had dimm'd mine eyes to blindness ! They, meanwhile, 5
 Friends, whom I never more may meet again,
 On springy heath, along the hill-top edge,
 Wander in gladness, and wind down, perchance,
 To that still roaring dell, of which I told ;
 The roaring dell, o'erwooded, narrow, deep, 10

And only speckled by the mid-day sun ;
 Where its slim trunk the ash from rock to rock
 Flings arching like a bridge ;—that branchless ash,
 Unsunn'd and damp, whose few poor yellow leaves
 Ne'er tremble in the gale, yet tremble still, 15
 Fann'd by the water-fall ! and there my friends
 Behold the dark green file of long lank weeds,
 That all at once (a most fantastic sight !)
 Still nod and drip beneath the dripping edge
 Of the blue clay-stone.

Now, my friends emerge 20
 Beneath the wide wide Heaven—and view again
 The many-steepled tract magnificent
 Of hilly fields and meadows, and the sea,
 With some fair bark, perhaps, whose sails light up
 The slip of smooth clear blue betwixt two Isles 25
 Of purple shadow ! Yes ! they wander on
 In gladness all ; but thou, methinks, most glad.
 My gentle-hearted Charles ! for thou hast pined
 And hunger'd after Nature, many a year,
 In the great City pent, winning thy way 30
 With sad yet patient soul, through evil and pain
 And strange calamity ! Ah ! slowly sink
 Behind the western ridge, thou glorious Sun !
 Shine in the slant beams of the sinking orb,
 Ye purple heath-flowers ! richlier burn, ye clouds ! 35
 Live in the yellow light, ye distant groves !
 And kindle, thou blue Ocean ! So my friend
 Struck with deep joy may stand, as I have stood,
 Silent with swimming sense ; yea, gazing round
 On the wide landscape, gaze till all doth seem 40
 Less gross than bodily ; and of such hues
 As veil the Almighty Spirit, when yet he makes Spirits perceive his presence.

A delight

Comes sudden on my heart, and I am glad
 As I myself were there ! Nor in this bower, 45
 This little lime-tree bower, have I not mark'd
 Much that has sooth'd me. Pale beneath the blaze
 Hung the transparent foliage ; and I watch'd
 Some broad and sunny leaf, and lov'd to see
 The shadow of the leaf and stem above 50
 Dappling its sunshine ! And that walnut-tree
 Was richly ting'd, and a deep radiance lay
 Full on the ancient ivy, which usurps
 Those fronting elms, and now, with blackest mass
 Makes their dark branches gleam a lighter hue 55
 Through the late twilight : and though now the bat
 Wheels silent by, and not a swallow twitters,
 Yet still the solitary humble-bee
 Sings in the bean-flower ! Henceforth I shall know
 That Nature ne'er deserts the wise and pure ; 60
 No plot so narrow, be but Nature there,
 No waste so vacant, but may well employ
 Each faculty of sense, and keep the heart
 Awake to Love and Beauty ! and sometimes
 'Tis well to be bereft of promis'd good, 65
 That we may lift the soul, and contemplate
 With lively joy the joys we cannot share.
 My gentle-hearted Charles ! when the last rook
 Beat its straight path along the dusky air
 Homewards, I blest it ! deeming its black wing 70
 (Now a dim speck, now vanishing in light)
 Had cross'd the mighty Orb's dilated glory,
 While thou stood'st gazing ; *or, when all was still,
 Flew creaking o'er thy head, and had a charm
 For thee, my gentle-hearted Charles, to whom 75
 No sound is dissonant which tells of Life.

The Foster-Mother's Tale

A DRAMATIC FRAGMENT

Composed 1797.—Published in Lyrical Ballads, 1798

Foster-Mother. I never saw the man whom you describe.

Maria. 'Tis strange! he spake of you familiarly
As mine and Albert's common Foster-mother.

Foster-Mother. Now blessings on the man, whoc'er he be,
That joined your names with mine! O my sweet lady, 5
As often as I think of those dear times
When you two little ones would stand at eve
On each side of my chair, and make me learn
All you had learnt in the day; and how to talk
In gentle phrase, then bid me sing to you— 10
'Tis more like heaven to come than what has been!

Maria. O my dear Mother! this strange man has left me
Troubled with wilder fancies, than the moon
Breeds in the love-sick maid who gazes at it,
Till lost in inward vision, with wet eye 15
She gazes idly!—But that entrance, Mother!

Foster-Mother. Can no one hear? It is a perilous tale!

Maria. No one.

Foster-Mother. My husband's father told it me,
Poor old Leoni!—Angels rest his soul!
He was a woodman, and could fell and saw 20
With lusty arm. You know that huge round beam
Which props the hanging wall of the old Chapel?
Beneath that tree, while yet it was a tree,
He found a baby wrapt in mosses, lined
With thistle-beards, and such small locks of wool 25
As hang on brambles. Well, he brought him home,
And rear'd him at the then Lord Velez' cost.,
And so the babe grew up a pretty boy,

A pretty boy, but most unteachable—
 And never learnt a prayer, nor told a bead, 30
 But knew the names of birds, and mock'd their notes,
 And whistled, as he were a bird himself :
 And all the autumn 'twas his only play
 To get the seeds of wild flowers, and to plant them
 With earth and water, on the stumps of trees. 35
 A Friar, who gather'd simples in the wood,
 A grey-haired man—he lov'd this little boy,
 The boy lov'd him—and, when the Friar taught him,
 He soon could write with the pen : and from that time,
 Lived chiefly at the Convent or the Castle. 40
 So he became a very learned youth.
 But Oh ! poor wretch !—he read, and read, and read,
 Till his brain turn'd—and ere his twentieth year,
 He had unlawful thoughts of many things :
 And though he prayed, he never lov'd to pray 45
 With holy men, nor in a holy place—
 But yet his speech, it was so soft and sweet,
 The late Lord Velez ne'er was wearied with him.
 And once, as by the north side of the Chapel
 They stood together, chain'd in deep discourse, 50
 The earth heav'd under them with such a groan,
 That the wall totter'd, and had well-nigh fallen
 Right on their heads. My Lord was sorely frighten'd :
 A fever seiz'd him, and he made confession
 Of all the heretical and lawless talk 55
 Which brought this judgement : so the youth was seiz'd
 And cast into that hole. My husband's father
 Sobb'd like a child—it almost broke his heart :
 And once as he was working in the cellar,
 He heard a voice distinctly ; 'twas the youth's, 60
 Who sung a doleful song about green fields,
 How sweet it were on lake or wild savannah,
 To hunt for food, and be a naked man,

And wander up and down at liberty.
 He always doted on the youth, and now 65
 His love grew desperate ; and defying death,
 He made that cunning entrance I describ'd :
 And the young man escap'd.

Maria. 'Tis a sweet tale :
 Such as would lull a listening child to sleep,
 His rosy face besoil'd with unwiped tears.— 70
 And what became of him ?

Foster-Mother. He went on shipboard
 With those bold voyagers, who made discovery
 Of golden lands. Leoni's younger brother
 Went likewise, and when he return'd to Spain,
 He told Leoni, that the poor mad youth, 75
 Soon after they arriv'd in that new world,
 In spite of his dissuasion, seiz'd a boat,
 And all alone, set sail by silent moonlight
 Up a great river, great as any sea,
 And ne'er was heard of more : but 'tis suppos'd, 80
 He liv'd and died among the savage men.

The Dungeon

Composed 1797.—Published in Lyrical Ballads, 1798

AND this place our forefathers made for man !
 This is the process of our love and wisdom,
 To each poor brother who offends against us—
 Most innocent, perhaps—and what if guilty ?
 Is this the only cure ? Merciful God ! 5
 Each pore and natural outlet shrivell'd up
 By Ignorance and parching Poverty,
 His energies roll back upon his heart,
 And stagnate and corrupt ; till chang'd to poison,
 They break out on him, like a loathsome plague-spot ; 10
 Then we call in our pamper'd mountebanks—
 And this is their best cure ! uncomforted
 And friendless solitude, groaning and tears,
 And savage faces, at the clanking hour,
 Seen through the steams and vapour of his dungeon, 15
 By the lamp's dismal twilight ! So he lies
 Circled with evil, till his very soul
 Unmoulds its essence, hopelessly deform'd
 By sights of ever more deformity !

With other ministrations thou, O Nature ! 20
 Healest thy wandering and distemper'd child :
 Thou pourest on him thy soft influences,
 Thy sunny hues, fair forms, and breathing sweets,
 Thy melodies of woods, and winds, and waters,
 Till he relent, and can no more endure 25
 To be a jarring and a dissonant thing,
 Amid this general dance and minstrelsy ;
 But, bursting into tears, wins back his way,
 His angry spirit heal'd and harmoniz'd
 By the benignant touch of Love and Beauty. 30

The Rime of the Ancient Mariner

IN SEVEN PARTS

Composed November 1797—March 1798.—Published in Lyrical Ballads, 1798

ARGUMENT

How a Ship having passed the Line was driven by storms to the cold Country towards the South Pole ; and how from thence she made her course to the tropical Latitude of the Great Pacific Ocean ; and of the strange things that befell ; and in what manner the Ancyent Marinere came back to his own Country.

PART I

An ancient Mariner meeteth three Gallants bidden to a wedding-feast, and detaineth one.

It is an ancient Mariner,
And he stoppeth one of three.
' By thy long grey beard and glittering eye,
Now wherefore stopp'st thou me ?

The Bridegroom's doors are opened wide, 5
And I am next of kin ;
The guests are met, the feast is set :
May'st hear the merry din.'

He holds him with his skinny hand,
' There was a ship,' quoth he. 10
' Hold off ! unhand me, grey-beard loon !'
Eftsoons his hand dropt he.

The Wedding-
Guest is spellbound by the eye of the old seafaringman, and constrained to hear his tale.

He holds him with his glittering eye—
The Wedding-Guest stood still,
And listens like a three years' child: 15
The Mariner hath his will.

The Wedding-Guest sat on a stone :
He cannot choose but hear ;
And thus spake on that ancient man,
The bright-eyed Mariner. 20

'The ship was cheered, the harbour cleared,
Merrily did we drop
Below the kirk, below the hill,
Below the lighthouse top.

The Mariner tells how the ship sailed southward with a good wind and fair weather, till it reached the

The Sun came up upon the left, 25
Out of the sea came he !
And he shone bright, and on the right
Went down into the sea.

Higher and higher every day,
Till over the mast at noon—' 30
The Wedding-Guest here beat his breast,
For he heard the loud bassoon.

The Wedding-
Guest heareth the bridal music ; but the Mariner continueth his tale.

The bride hath paced into the hall,
Red as a rose is she ;
Nodding their heads before her goes 25
The merry minstrelsy.

The Wedding-Guest he beat his breast,
Yet he cannot choose but hear ;
And thus spake on that ancient man,
The bright-eyed Mariner. 40

The ship driven by a storm toward the south pole.

'And now the STORM-BLAST came, and he
Was tyrannous and strong :
He struck with his o'ertaking wings,
And chased us south along.

With sloping masts and dipping prow. 45
As who pursued with yell and blow
Still treads the shadow of his foe,
And forward bends his head,
'The ship drove fast, loud roared the blast,
And southward, aye we fled. 50

And now there came both mist and snow,
 And it grew wondrous cold :
 And ice, mast-high, came floating by,
 As green as emerald.

The land of ice, and of fearful sounds where no living thing was to be seen. And through the drifts the snowy cliffs 55
 Did send a dismal sheen :
 Nor shapes of men nor beasts we ken—
 The ice was all between.

The ice was here, the ice was there,
 The ice was all around : 60
 It cracked and growled, and roared and howled,
 Like noises in a swound !

Till a great sea-bird, called the Albatross, came through the snow-fog, and was received with great joy and hospitality. At length did cross an Albatross,
 Thorough the fog it came ;
 As if it had been a Christian soul, 65
 We hailed it in God's name.
 It ate the food it ne'er had eat,
 And round and round it flew.

The ice did split with a thunder-fit ;
 The helmsman steered us through ! 70

And lo ! the Albatross proveth a bird of good omen, and followeth the ship as it returned northward through fog and floating ice. And a good south wind sprung up behind ;
 The Albatross did follow,
 And every day, for food or play,
 Came to the mariner's hollo !
 In mist or cloud, on mast or shroud, 75
 It perched for vespers nine ;
 Whiles all the night, through fog-smoke white,
 Glimmered the white Moon-shine.'

The ancient Mariner inhospitably killeth the pious bird of good omen. ' God save thee, ancient Mariner !
 From the fiends, that plague thee thus !— so
 Why look'st thou so ? '— ' With my cross-bow
 I shot the ALBATROSS.

PART II

The Sun now rose upon the right:
 Out of the sea came he,
 Still hid in mist, and on the left 85
 Went down into the sea.

And the good south wind still blew behind,
 But no sweet bird did follow,
 Nor any day for food or play
 Came to the mariner's hollo ! 90

His shipmates cry out against the ancient Mariner, for killing the bird of good luck.

And I had done a hellish thing,
 And it would work 'em woe :
 For all averred, I had killed the bird
 That made the breeze to blow.
 Ah wretch ! said they, the bird to slay, 95
 That made the breeze to blow !

But when the fog cleared off, they justify the same, and thus make themselves accomplices
 in the crime.

Nor dim nor red, like God's own head,
 The glorious Sun uprist :
 Then all averred, I had killed the bird
 That brought the fog and mist. 100
 'Twas right, said they, such birds to slay,
 That bring the fog and mist.

The fair breeze continues ;
 the ship enters the Pacific Ocean, and sails northward, even till it reaches the Line.

The fair breeze blew, the white foam flew,
 The furrow followed free ;
 We were the first that ever burst 105
 Into that silent sea.

The ship hath been suddenly becalmed.

Down dropt the breeze, the sails dropt down,
 'Twas sad as sad could be
 And we did speak only to break
 The silence of the sea ! 110

All in a hot and copper sky,
 The bloody Sun, at noon,
 Right up above the mast did stand,
 No bigger than the Moon,

Day after day, day after day, 115
 We stuck, nor breath nor motion ;
 As idle as a painted ship
 Upon a painted ocean.

And the Albatross begins to be avenged.

Water, water, every where,
 And all the boards did shrink ; 120
 Water, water, every where,
 Nor any drop to drink.

The very deep did rot : O Christ !
 That ever this should be !
 Yea, slimy things did crawl with legs 125
 Upon the slimy sea.

About, about, in reel and rout
 The death-fires danced at night ;
 The water, like a witch's oils,
 Burnt green, and blue and white. 130

A Spirit had followed them ;
 one of the invisible inhabitants of this planet, neither departed souls

nor angels ; concerning whom the learned Jew, Josephus, and the Platonic Constantinopolitan, Michael Psellus, may be consulted. They are very numerous, and there is no climate or element without one or more.

And some in dreams assuréd were
 Of the Spirit that plagued us so ;
 Nine fathom deep he had followed us
 From the land of mist and snow.

And every tongue, through utter drought, 135
 Was withered at the root ;
 We could not speak, no more than if
 We had been choked with soot.

The shipmates, in their sore distress, would fain throw the whole guilt on the ancient Mariner : in sign whereof they hang the dead sea-bird round his neck.

Ah ! well a-day ! what evil looks
Had I from old and young !
Instead of the cross, the Albatross
About my neck was hung.

140

PART III

There passed a weary time. Each throat
Was parched, and glazed each eye.
A weary time ! a weary time !
How glazed each weary eye,
When looking westward, I beheld
A something in the sky.

145

The ancient Mariner beholdeth a sign in the element afar off.

At first it seemed a little speck,
And then it seemed a mist ;
It moved and moved, and took at last
A certain shape, I wist.

150

A speck, a mist, a shape, I wist !
And still it neared and neared :
As if it dodged a water-sprite,
It plunged and tacked and veered.

At its nearer approach, it seemeth him to be a ship ;
and at a dear ransom he freeth his speech from the bonds of thirst.

With throats unslaked, with black lips baked,
We could nor laugh nor wail ;
Through utter drought all dumb we stood !
I bit my arm, I sucked the blood,
And cried, A sail ! a sail !

With throats unslaked, with black lips baked,
Agape they heard me call :

A flash of joy ;

Gramercy ! they for joy did grin,
And all at once their breath drew in,
As they were drinking all.

165

And horror follows. For can it be a ship that comes onward without wind or tide ?

See ! see ! (I cried) she tacks no more !
Hither to work us weal ;
Without a breeze, without a tide,
She steadies with upright keel !

170

The western wave was all a-flame.
The day was well nigh done !
Almost upon the western wave
Rested the broad bright Sun ;
When that strange shape drove suddenly 175
Betwixt us and the Sun.

It seemeth him but the skeleton of a ship.

And straight the Sun was flecked with bars,
(Heaven's Mother send us grace !)
As if through a dungeon-grate he peered
With broad and burning face.

And its ribs are seen as bars on the face of the setting Sun.

Alas ! (thought I, and my heart beat loud)
How fast she nears and nears !
Are those her sails that glance in the Sun,
Like restless gossameres ?

The Spectre-Woman and her Death-mate, and no other on board the skeleton ship.

Are those her ribs through which the Sun 185
Did peer, as through a grate ?
And is that Woman all her crew ?
Is that a DEATH ? and are there two ?
Is DEATH that woman's mate ?

Like vessel,
like crew !

Her lips were red, her looks were free,
Her locks were yellow as gold :

Death and Life-in-Death have diced for the ship's crew, and she
(the latter) winneth the ancient Mariner.

Her skin was as white as leprosy,
The Night-mare LIFE-IN-DEATH was she,
Who thicks man's blood with cold.

The naked hulk alongside came, 195
And the twain were casting dice ;
' The game is done ! I've won ! I've won ! '
Quoth she, and whistles thrice.

No twilight within the courts of the Sun.

The Sun's rim dips ; the stars rush out :
At one stride comes the dark ; 200
With far-heard whisper, o'er the sea,
Off shot the spectre-bark.

At the rising of the Moon,

We listened and looked sideways up !
Fear at my heart, as at a cup,
My life-blood seemed to sip ! 205
The stars were dim, and thick the night,
The steersman's face by his lamp gleamed white;
From the sails the dew did drip—
Till clomb above the eastern bar
The hornéd Moon, with one bright star 210
Within the nether tip.

One after another,

One after one, by the star-dogged Moon,
Too quick for groan or sigh,
Each turned his face with a ghastly pang,
And cursed me with his eye. 215

His shipmates drop down dead.

Four times fifty living men,
(And I heard nor sigh nor groan)
With heavy thump, a lifeless lump,
They dropped down one by one.

But Life-in-Death begins her work on the ancient Mariner.

The souls did from their bodies fly,— 220
They fled to bliss or woe !
And every soul, it passed me by,
Like the whizz of my cross-bow !'

PART IV

The Wedding-
Guest feareth that a Spirit is talking to him ;

' I fear thee, ancient Mariner !
I fear thy skinny hand ! 225
And thou art long, and lank, and brown,
As is the ribbed sea-sand.

I fear thee and thy glittering eye,
 And thy skinny hand, so brown.'—
 'Fear not, fear not, thou Wedding-Guest ! 230
 This body dropt not down.

But the ancient Mariner assureth him of his bodily life, and proceedeth to relate his horrible penance.

Alone, alone, all, all alone,
 Alone on a wide wide sea !
 And never a saint took pity on
 My soul in agony. 235

He despiseth
 the creatures of the calm,

The many men, so beautiful !
 And they all dead did lie :
 And a thousand thousand slimy things
 Lived on ; and so did I.

And envieth that they should live, and so many lie dead.

I looked upon the rotting sea, 240
 And drew my eyes away ;
 I looked upon the rotting deck,
 And there the dead men lay.

I looked to heaven, and tried to pray ;
 But or ever a prayer had gusht, 245
 A wicked whisper came, and made
 My heart as dry as dust.

I closed my lids, and kept them close,
 And the balls like pulses beat ;
 For the sky and the sea, and the sea and the sky
 Lay like a load on my weary eye, 251
 And the dead were at my feet.

But the curse liveth for him in the eye of the dead men.

The cold sweat melted from their limbs,
 Nor rot nor reck did they :
 The look with which they looked, on me 255
 Had never passed away.

An orphan's curse would drag to hell
 A spirit from on high ;
 But oh ! more horrible than that
 Is the curse in a dead man's eye ! 260
 Seven days, seven nights, I saw that curse,
 And yet I could not die.

In his loneliness and fixedness he yearneth towards the journeying Moon, and the stars that still sojourn, yet still move onward ; and every where the blue sky belongs to them, and is their appointed rest, and their native country and their own natural homes, which they enter un-announced, as lords that are certainly expected and yet there is a silent joy at their arrival.

The moving Moon went up the sky,
 And no where did abide :
 Softly she was going up, 265
 And a star or two beside—

Her beams bemoaned the sultry main,
 Like April hoar-frost spread ;
 But where the ship's huge shadow lay,
 'The charmed water burnt away 270
 A still and awful red.

By the light of the Moon he beholdeth God's creatures of the great calm.

Beyond the shadow of the ship,
 I watched the water-snakes :
 They moved in tracks of shining white,
 And when they reared, the elfish light 275
 Fell off in hoary flakes.

Within the shadow of the ship
 I watched their rich attire :
 Blue, glossy green, and velvet black,
 They coiled and swam ; and every track 280
 Was a flash of golden fire.

Their beauty and their happiness.

O happy living things ! no tongue
 Their beauty might declare :
 A spring of love gushed from my heart,
 And I blessed them unaware : 285
 Sure my kind saint took pity on me,
 And I blessed them unaware.

He blest them in his heart..

The spell begins to break.

The self-same moment I could pray ;
And from my neck so free
The Albatross fell off, and sank 290
Like lead into the sea.

PART V

Oh sleep ! it is a gentle thing,
Beloved from pole to pole !
To Mary Queen the praise be given !
She sent the gentle sleep from Heaven, 295
That slid into my soul.

By grace of the holy Mother, the ancient Mariner is refreshed with rain.

The silly buckets on the deck,
That had so long remained,
I dreamt that they were filled with dew ;
And when I awoke, it rained. 300

My lips were wet, my throat was cold,
My garments all were dank ;
Sure I had drunken in my dreams,
And still my body drank.

I moved, and could not feel my limbs : 305
I was so light—almost
I thought that I had died in sleep,
And was a blessed ghost.

He heareth sounds and seeth strange sights and commotions in the sky and the element.

And soon I heard a roaring wind :
It did not come anear ; 310
But with its sound it shook the sails,
That were so thin and sere.

The upper air burst into life !
And a hundred fire-flags sheen,
To and fro they were hurried about ! 315
And to and fro, and in and out, ,
The wan stars danced between.

And the coming wind did roar more loud,
 And the sails did sigh like sedge ; 319
 And the rain poured down from one black cloud ;
 The Moon was at its edge.

The thick black cloud was cleft, and still
 The Moon was at its side :
 Like waters shot from some high crag,
 The lightning fell with never a jag, 325
 A river steep and wide.

The bodies of the ship's crew are inspirited, and the ship moves on ;

The loud wind never reached the ship,
 Yet now the ship moved on !
 Beneath the lightning and the Moon
 The dead men gave a groan. 330

They groaned, they stirred, they all uprose,
 Nor spake, nor moved their eyes ;
 It had been strange, even in a dream,
 To have seen those dead men rise.

The helmsman steered, the ship moved on ; 335
 Yet never a breeze up-blew ;
 The mariners all 'gan work the ropes,
 Where they were wont to do ;
 They raised their limbs like lifeless tools—
 We were a ghastly crew. 340

The body of my brother's son
 Stood by me, knee to knee :
 The body and I pulled at one rope,
 But he said nought to me.'

But not by the souls of the men, nor by dæmons of earth or middle air, but by a blessed troop, of angelic spirits,
 sent down by the invocation of the guardian saint.

' I fear thee, ancient Mariner !' 345
 ' Be calm, thou Wedding-Guest !
 'Twas not those souls that fled in pain,
 Which to their corpses came again,
 But a troop of spirits blest :
 the invocation of the guardian saint.

For when it dawned—they dropped their arms,
 And clustered round the mast ; 351
 Sweet sounds rose slowly through their mouths,
 And from their bodies passed.

Around, around, flew each sweet sound,
 Then darted to the Sun ; 355
 Slowly the sounds came back again,
 Now mixed, now one by one.

Sometimes a-dropping from the sky
 I heard the sky-lark sing ;
 Sometimes all little birds that arc, 360
 How they seemed to fill the sea and air
 With their sweet jargoning !

And now 'twas like all instruments,
 Now like a lonely flute ;
 And now it is an angel's song, 365
 That makes the heavens be mute.

It ceased ; yet still the sails made on
 A pleasant noise till noon,
 A noise like of a hidden brook
 In the leafy month of June, 370
 That to the sleeping woods all night
 Singeth a quiet tune.

Till noon we quietly sailed on,
 Yet never a breeze did breathe :
 Slowly and smoothly went the ship, 375
 Moved onward from beneath.

The lonesome Spirit from the south-pole carries on the ship as far as the Line, in obedience to the angelic troop, but still requireth vengeance.

Under the keel nine fathom deep,
 From the land of mist and snow,
 The spirit slid : and it was he 380
 That made the ship to go.
 The sails at noon left off their tune,
 And the ship stood still also.

The Sun, right up above the mast,
 Had fixed her to the ocean :
 But in a minute she 'gan stir, 385
 With a short uneasy motion—
 Backwards and forwards half her length
 With a short uneasy motion.

Then like a pawing horse let go,
 She made a sudden bound : 390
 It flung the blood into my head,
 And I fell down in a swoond.

The Polar
 Spirit's fellowdæmons, the invisible inhabitants of the element, take part in his wrong ;
 and two of them relate, one to the other, that penance long and heavy for the ancient Mariner hath been accorded to the Polar Spirit, who returneth
 southward.

How long in that same fit I lay,
 I have not to declare ;
 But ere my living life returned, 395
 I heard and in my soul discerned
 Two voices in the air.

' Is it he ? ' quoth one, ' Is this the man ?
 By him who died on cross,
 With his cruel bow he laid full low 400
 The harmless Albatross.

The spirit who bideth by himself
 In the land of mist and snow,
 He loved the bird that loved the man
 Who shot him with his bow.' 405

The other was a softer voice,
 As soft as honey-dew :
 Quoth he, ' The man hath penance done,
 And penance more will do.'

PART VI

FIRST VOICE

' But tell me, tell me ! speak again, 410
 Thy soft response renewing—
 What makes that ship drive on so fast ?
 What is the ocean doing ? '

SECOND VOICE

' Still as a slave before his lord,
The ocean hath no blast ; 415
His great bright eye most silently
Up to the Moon is cast—

If he may know which way to go ;
For she guides him smooth or grim.
See, brother, see ! how graciously 420
She looketh down on him.'

FIRST VOICE

The Mariner hath been cast into a trance; for the angelic power causeth the vessel to drive northward faster than human life could endure.

' But why drives on that ship so fast,
Without or wave or wind ? '

SECOND VOICE

' The air is cut away before,
And closes from behind. 425
Fly, brother, fly ! more high, more high !
Or we shall be belated :
For slow and slow that ship will go,
When the Mariner's trance is abated.'

The super-natural motion is retarded ;
the Mariner awakes, and his penance begins anew.

I woke, and we were sailing on 430
As in a gentle weather :
'Twas night, calm night, the moon was high ;
The dead men stood together.

All stood together on the deck,
For a charnel-dungeon fitter : 435
All fixed on me their stony eyes,
That in the Moon did glitter.

The pang, the curse, with which they died,
Had never passed away :
I could not draw my eyes from theirs, 440
Nor turn them up to pray.

The curse is finally expiated.

And now this spell was snapt : once more
I viewed the ocean green,
And looked far forth, yet little saw
Of what had else been seen— 445

Like one, that on a lonesome road
Doth walk in fear and dread,
And having once turned round walks on,
And turns no more his head ;
Because he knows, a frightful fiend 450
Doth close behind him tread.

But soon there breathed a wind on me,
Nor sound nor motion made :
Its path was not upon the sea,
In ripple or in shade. 455

It raised my hair, it fanned my cheek
Like a meadow-gale of spring—
It mingled strangely with my fears,
Yet it felt like a welcoming.

Swiftly, swiftly flew the ship, 460
Yet she sailed softly too :
Sweetly, sweetly blew the breeze—
On me alone it blew.

And the ancient Mariner beholdeth his native country.

Oh ! dream of joy ! is this indeed
The light-house top I see ? 465
Is this the hill ? is this the kirk ?
Is this mine own countree ?

We drifted o'er the harbour-bar,
And I with sobs did pray—
O let me be awake, my God ! 470
Or let me sleep alway.

The harbour-bay was clear as glass,
 So smoothly it was strewn !
 And on the bay the moonlight lay,
 And the shadow of the Moon. 475

The rock shone bright, the kirk no less,
 That stands above the rock :
 The moonlight steeped in silentness
 The steady weathercock.

And the bay was white with silent light, 480
 Till rising from the same,
 Full many shapes, that shadows were,
 In crimson colours came.

The angelic spirits leave the dead bodies,

And appear in their own forms of light.

A little distance from the prow
 Those crimson shadows were : 485
 I turned my eyes upon the deck—
 Oh, Christ ! what saw I there !

Each corse lay flat, lifeless and flat,
 And, by the holy rood !
 A man all light, a seraph-man, 490
 On every corse there stood.

This seraph-band, each waved his hand :
 It was a heavenly sight !
 They stood as signals to the land,
 Each one a lovely light ; 495

This seraph-band, each waved his hand,
 No voice did they impart—
 No voice ; but oh ! the silence sank
 Like music on my heart.

But soon I heard the dash of oars, 500
 I heard the Pilot's cheer ;
 My head was turned perforce away,
 And I saw a boat appear.

The Pilot and the Pilot's boy,
 I heard them coming fast : 505
 Dear Lord in Heaven ! it was a joy
 The dead men could not blast.

I saw a third—I heard his voice :
 It is the Hermit good !
 He singeth loud his godly hymns 510
 That he makes in the wood.
 He'll shrive my soul, he'll wash away
 The Albatross's blood.

PART VII

The Hermit of the Wood, This Hermit good lives in that wood
 Which slopes down to the sea. 515
 How loudly his sweet voice he rears !
 He loves to talk with marineres
 That come from a far countree.

He kneels at morn, and noon, and eve—
 He hath a cushion plump : 520
 It is the moss that wholly hides
 The rotted old oak-stump.

The skiff-boat neared : I heard them talk,
 ' Why, this is strange, I trow !
 Where are those lights so many and fair, 525
 That signal made but now ? '

Approacheth
 the ship with wonder. ' Strange, by my faith ! ' the Hermit said—
 ' And they answer'd not our cheer !
 The planks looked warped ! and see those sails,
 How thin they are and sere ! 530
 I never saw aught like to them,
 Unless perchance it were

Brown skeletons of leaves that lag
 My forest-brook along ;
 When the ivy-tod is heavy with snow, 535
 And the owlet whoops to the wolf below,
 That eats the she-wolf's young.'

' Dear Lord !' it hath a fiendish look—
 (The Pilot made reply)
 I am a-feared '—' Push on, push on !' 540
 Said the Hermit cheerily.

The boat came closer to the ship,
 But I nor spake nor stirred ;
 The boat came close beneath the ship,
 And straight a sound was heard. 545

The ship
 suddenly sinketh.

Under the water it rumbled on,
 Still louder and more dread :
 It reached the ship, it split the bay ;
 The ship went down like lead.

The ancient Mariner is saved in the Pilot's boat.

Stunned by that loud and dreadful sound, 550
 Which sky and ocean smote,
 Like one that hath been seven days drowned
 My body lay afloat ;
 But swift as dreams, myself I found
 Within the Pilot's boat. 555

Upon the whirl, where sank the ship,
 The boat spun round and round ;
 And all was still, save that the hill
 Was telling of the sound.

I moved my lips—the Pilot shrieked 560
 And fell down in a fit ;
 The holy Hermit raised his eyes,
 And prayed where he did sit.

I took the oars : the Pilot's boy,
 Who now doth crazy go, 565
 Laughed loud and long, and all the while
 His eyes went to and fro.
 ' Ha ! ha ! ' quoth he, ' full plain I see,
 The Devil knows how to row.'

And now, all in my own countree, 570
 I stood on the firm land !
 The Hermit stepped forth from the boat,
 And scarcely he could stand.

The ancient Mariner earnestly entreateth the Hermit to shrieve him ;
 and the penance of life falls on him.

' O shrieve me, shrieve me, holy man ! '
 The Hermit crossed his brow. 575
 ' Say quick,' quoth he, ' I bid thee say—
 What manner of man art thou ? '

Forthwith this frame of mine was wrenched
 With a woful agony,
 Which forced me to begin my tale ; 580
 And then it left me free.

And ever and anon throughout his future life an agony constraineth him to travel from land to land ;

Since then, at an uncertain hour,
 That agony returns :
 And till my ghastly tale is told,
 This heart within me burns. 585

I pass, like night, from land to land ;
 I have strange power of speech ;
 That moment that his face I see,
 I know the man that must hear me :
 To him my tale I teach. 590

' What loud uproar bursts from that door !
 The wedding-guests are there :
 But in the garden-bower the bride
 And bride-maids singing are :
 And hark the little vesper bell, 595
 Which biddeth me to prayer ! '

'O Wedding-Guest ! this soul hath been
 Alone on a wide wide sea :
 So lonely 'twas, that God himself
 Scarce seeméd there to be.

600

O sweeter than the marriage-feast,
 'Tis sweeter far to me,
 To walk together to the kirk
 With a goodly company !—

To walk together to the kirk, 605
 And all together pray,
 While each to his great Father bends,
 Old men, and babes, and loving friends
 And youths and maidens gay !

And to teach,
 by his own example, love and reverence to all things that God made and loveth.

Farewell, farewell ! but this I tell 610
 To thee, thou Wedding-Guest !
 He prayeth well, who loveth well
 Both man and bird and beast.

He prayeth best, who loveth best
 All things both great and small ; 615
 For the dear God who loveth us,
 He made and loveth all.'

The Mariner, whose eye is bright,
 Whose beard with age is hoar,
 Is gone : and now the Wedding-Guest 620
 Turned from the bridegroom's door.

He went like one that hath been stunned,
 And is of sense forlorn :
 A sadder and a wiser man,
 He rose the morrow morn.

PART I

'Tis the middle of night by the castle clock,
And the owls have awakened the crowing cock ;
Tu—whit !——Tu—whoo !
And hark, again ! the crowing cock,
How drowsily it crew. 5

Sir Leoline, the Baron rich,
Hath a toothless mastiff bitch ;
From her kennel beneath the rock
She maketh answer to the clock,
Four for the quarters, and twelve for the hour ; 10
Ever and aye, by shine and shower,
Sixteen short howls, not over loud ;
Some say, she sees my lady's shroud.

Is the night chilly and dark ?
The night is chilly, but not dark. 15
The thin gray cloud is spread on high,
It covers but not hides the sky.
The moon is behind, and at the full ;
And yet she looks both small and dull.
The night is chill, the cloud is gray : 20
'Tis a month before the month of May,
And the Spring comes slowly up this way.

The lovely lady, Christabel,
Whom her father loves so well,
What makes her in the wood so late, 25
A furlong from the castle gate ?

She had dreams all yesternight
 Of her own betrothed knight ;
 And she in the midnight wood will pray
 For the weal of her lover that 's far away. 30

She stole along, she nothing spoke,
 The sighs she heaved were soft and low,
 And naught was green upon the oak
 But moss and rarest misletoe :
 She kneels beneath the huge oak tree, 35
 And in silence prayeth she.

The lady sprang up suddenly,
 The lovely lady, Christabel !
 It moaned as near, as near can be,
 But what it is she cannot tell.— 40
 On the other side it seems to be,
 Of the huge, broad-breasted, old oak tree.

The night is chill ; the forest bare ;
 Is it the wind that moaneth bleak ?
 There is not wind enough in the air 45
 To move away the ringlet curl
 From the lovely lady's cheek—
 There is not wind enough to twirl
 The one red leaf, the last of its clan,
 That dances as often as dance it can, 50
 Hanging so light, and hanging so high,
 On the topmost twig that looks up at the sky.

Hush, beating heart of Christabel !
 Jesu, Maria, shield her well !
 She folded her arms beneath her cloak, 55
 And stole to the other side of the oak. .
 What sees she there ?

There she sees a damsel bright,
 Drest in a silken robe of white,
 That shadowy in the moonlight shone : 60
 The neck that made that white robe wan,
 Her stately neck, and arms were bare ;
 Her blue-veined feet unsandal'd were,
 And wildly glittered here and there
 The gems entangled in her hair. 65

I guess, 'twas frightful there to see
 A lady so richly clad as she—Beautiful exceedingly !

Mary mother, save me now !
 (Said Christabel,) And who art thou ? 70

The lady strange made answer meet,
 And her voice was faint and sweet —
 Have pity on my sore distress,
 I scarce can speak for weariness :
 Stretch forth thy hand, and have no fear ! 75
 Said Christabel, How camest thou here ?
 And the lady, whose voice was faint and sweet,
 Did thus pursue her answer meet :—

My sire is of a noble line,
 And my name is Geraldine : 80
 Five warriors seized me yesternorn,
 Me, even me, a maid forlorn :
 They choked my cries with force and fright,
 And tied me on a palfrey white.
 The palfrey was as fleet as wind, 85
 And they rode furiously behind.

They spurred amain, their steeds were white :
 And once we crossed the shade of night.

As sure as Heaven shall rescue me,
 I have no thought what men they be ; 90
 Nor do I know how long it is
 (For I have lain entranced I wis)
 Since one, the tallest of the five,
 Took me from the palfrey's back,
 A weary woman, scarce alive. 95
 Some muttered words his comrades spoke :
 He placed me underneath this oak ;
 He swore they would return with haste ;
 Whither they went I cannot tell—
 I thought I heard, some minutes past, 100
 Sounds as of a castle bell.
 Stretch forth thy hand (thus ended she),
 And help a wretched maid to flee.

 Then Christabel stretched forth her hand,
 And comforted fair Geraldine : 105
 O well, bright dame ! may you command
 The service of Sir Leoline ;
 And gladly our stout chivalry
 Will he send forth and friends withal
 To guide and guard you safe and free 110
 Home to your noble father's hall.

 She rose : and forth with steps they passed
 That strove to be, and were not, fast.
 Her gracious stars the lady blest,
 And thus spake on sweet Christabel : 115
 All our household are at rest,
 The hall as silent as the cell ;
 Sir Leoline is weak in health,
 And may not well awakened be,
 But we will move as if in stealth, 120
 And I beseech your courtesy,
 This night, to share your couch with me.

They crossed the moat, and Christabel
 Took the key that fitted well ;
 A little door she opened straight, 125
 All in the middle of the gate ;
 The gate that was ironed within and without,
 Where an army in battle array had marched out.
 The lady sank, belike through pain,
 And Christabel with might and main 130
 Lifted her up, a weary weight,
 Over the threshold of the gate :
 Then the lady rose again,
 And moved, as she were not in pain.

So free from danger, free from fear, 135
 They crossed the court : right glad they were.
 And Christabel devoutly cried
 To the lady by her side,
 Praise we the Virgin all divine
 Who hath rescued thee from thy distress ! 140
 Alas, alas ! said Geraldine,
 I cannot speak for weariness.
 So free from danger, free from fear,
 They crossed the court : right glad they were.

Outside her kennel, the mastiff old 145
 Lay fast asleep, in moonshine cold.
 The mastiff old did not awake,
 Yet she an angry moan did make !
 And what can ail the mastiff bitch ?
 Never till now she uttered yell 150
 Beneath the eye of Christabel.
 Perhaps it is the owlet's scritch :
 For what can ail the mastiff bitch ?

They passed the hall, that echoes still,
 Pass as lightly as you will ! 155

The brands were flat, the brands were dying,
 Amid their own white ashes lying ;
 But when the lady passed, there came
 A tongue of light, a fit of flame ;
 And Christabel saw the lady's eye, 160
 And nothing else saw she thereby,
 Save the boss of the shield of Sir Leoline tall,
 Which hung in a murky old niche in the wall.
 O softly tread, said Christabel,
 My father seldom sleepeth well. 165

Sweet Christabel her feet doth bare,
 And jealous of the listening air
 They steal their way from stair to stair,
 Now in glimmer, and now in gloom,
 And now they pass the Baron's room, 170
 As still as death, with stifled breath !
 And now have reached her chamber door ;
 And now doth Geraldine press down
 The rushes of the chamber floor.

The moon shines dim in the open air, 175
 And not a moonbeam enters here.
 But they without its light can see
 The chamber carved so curiously,
 Carved with figures strange and sweet,
 All made out of the carver's brain, 180
 For a lady's chamber meet :
 The lamp with twofold silver chain
 Is fastened to an angel's feet.

The silver lamp burns dead and dim ;
 But Christabel the lamp will trim. 185
 She trimmed the lamp, and made it bright,
 And left it swinging to and fro,
 While Geraldine, in wretched plight,
 Sank down upon the floor below.

O weary lady, Geraldine, 190
 I pray you, drink this cordial wine !
 It is a wine of virtuous powers ;
 My mother made it of wild flowers.
 And will your mother pity me,
 Who am a maiden most forlorn ? 195
 Christabel answered—Woe is me !
 She died the hour that I was born.
 I have heard the grey-haired friar tell
 How on her death-bed she did say,
 That she should hear the castle-bell 200
 Strike twelve upon my wedding-day.
 O mother dear ! that thou wert here !
 I would, said Geraldine, she were !
 But soon with altered voice, said she—
 ‘ Off, wandering mother ! Peak and pine ! 205
 I have power to bid thee flee.’
 Alas ! what ails poor Geraldine ?
 Why stares she with unsettled eye ?
 Can she the bodiless dead espy ?
 And why with hollow voice cries she, 210
 ‘ Off, woman, off ! this hour is mine—
 Though thou her guardian spirit be,
 Off, woman, off ! ’tis given to me.’
 Then Christabel knelt by the lady’s side,
 And raised to heaven her eyes so blue— 215
 Alas ! said she, this ghastly ride—
 Dear lady ! it hath wildered you !
 The lady wiped her moist cold brow,
 And faintly said, ‘ ’tis over now !’
 Again the wild-flower wine she drank : 220
 Her fair large eyes ’gan glitter bright,
 And from the floor whereon she sank,
 The lofty lady stood upright :

She was most beautiful to see,
Like a lady of a far countrée. 225

And thus the lofty lady spake—
' All they who live in the upper sky,
Do love you, holy Christabel !
And you love them, and for their sake
And for the good which me befel, 230
Even I in my degree will try,
Fair maiden, to requite you well.
But now unrobe yourself ; for I
Must pray, ere yet in bed I lie.'

Quoth Christabel, So let it be ! 235
And as the lady bade, did she.
Her gentle limbs did she undress,
And lay down in her loveliness.

But through her brain of weal and woe
So many thoughts moved to and fro, 240
That vain it were her lids to close ;
So half-way from the bed she rose,
And on her elbow did recline
To look at the lady Geraldine.

Beneath the lamp the lady bowed, 245
And slowly rolled her eyes around ;
Then drawing in her breath aloud,
Like one that shuddered, she unbound
The cincture from beneath her breast :
Her silken robe, and inner vest, 250
Dropt to her feet, and full in view,
Behold ! her bosom and half her side——
A sight to dream of, not to tell !
O shield her ! shield sweet Christabel !

Yet Geraldine nor speaks nor stirs ; 255
 Ah ! what a stricken look was hers !
 Deep from within she seems half way
 To lift some weight with sick assay,
 And eyes the maid and seeks delay
 Then suddenly, as one defied, 260
 Collects herself in scorn and pride,
 And lay down by the Maiden's side !—
 And in her arms the maid she took Ah wel-a-day !
 And with low voice and doleful look 265
 These words did say :
 ' In the touch of this bosom there worketh a spell,
 Which is lord of thy utterance, Christabel !
 Thou knowest to-night, and wilt know to-morrow,
 This mark of my shame, this seal of my sorrow ; 270
 But vainly thou warrest,
 For this is alone in Thy power to declare,
 That in the dim forest
 Thou heard'st a low moaning, 275
 And found'st a bright lady, surpassingly fair ;
 And didst bring her home with thee in love and in charity,
 To shield her and shelter her from the damp air.'

THE CONCLUSION TO PART I

It was a lovely sight to see
 The lady Christabel, when she 280
 Was praying at the old oak tree.
 Amid the jagged shadows
 Of mossy leafless boughs,
 Kneeling in the moonlight,
 To make her gentle vows ; 285

Her slender palms together prest,
 Heaving sometimes on her breast ;
 Her face resigned to bliss or bale—
 Her face, oh call it fair, not pale,
 And both blue eyes more bright than clear, 290
 Each about to have a tear.

With open eyes (ah woe is me !)
 Asleep, and dreaming fearfully,
 Fearfully dreaming, yet, I wis,
 Dreaming that alone, which is— 295
 O sorrow and shame ! Can this be she,
 The lady, who knelt at the old oak tree ?
 And lo ! the worker of these harms,
 That holds the maiden in her arms,
 Seems to slumber still and mild, 300
 As a mother with her child.

A star hath set, a star hath risen,
 O Geraldine ! since arms of thine
 Have been the lovely lady's prison.
 O Geraldine ! one hour was thine— 305
 Thou'st had thy will ! By tairn and rill,
 The night-birds all that hour were still.
 But now they are jubilant anew,
 From cliff and tower, tu—whoo ! tu—whoo !
 Tu—whoo ! tu—whoo ! from wood and fell ! 310

And see ! the lady Christabel
 Gathers herself from out her trance ;
 Her limbs relax, her countenance
 Grows sad and soft ; the smooth thin lids
 Close o'er her eyes ; and tears she sheds— 315
 Large tears that leave the lashes bright !
 And oft the while she seems to smile
 As infants at a sudden light !

Yea, she doth smile, and she doth weep,
 Like a youthful hermitess, 320
 Beauteous in a wilderness,
 Who, praying always, prays in sleep.
 And, if she move unquietly,
 Perchance, 'tis but the blood so free
 Comes back and tingles in her feet. 325
 No doubt, she hath a vision sweet.
 What if her guardian spirit 'twere,
 What if she knew her mother near ?
 But this she knows, in joys and woes,
 That saints will aid if men will call : 330
 For the blue sky bends over all !

PART II

Each matin bell, the Baron saith,
 Knells us back to a world of death.
 These words Sir Leoline first said,
 When he rose and found his lady dead : 335
 These words Sir Leoline will say
 Many a morn to his dying day !

And hence the custom and law began
 That still at dawn the sacristan,
 Who duly pulls the heavy bell, 340
 Five and forty beads must tell
 Between each stroke—a warning knell,
 Which not a soul can choose but hear
 From Bratha Head to Wyndermere.

Saith Bracy the bard, So let it knell ! 345
 And let the drowsy sacristan
 Still count as slowly as he can !
 There is no lack of such, I ween,
 As well fill up the space between.

In Langdale Pike and Witch's Lair, 350
 And Dungeon-ghyll so foully rent,
 With ropes of rock and bells of air
 Three sinful sextons' ghosts are pent,
 Who all give back, one after t'other,
 The death-note to their living brother ; 355
 And oft too, by the knell offended,
 Just as their one ! two ! three ! is ended,
 The devil mocks the doleful tale
 With a merry peal from Borodale.

The air is still ! through mist and cloud 360
 That merry peal comes ringing loud ;
 And Geraldine shakes off her dread,
 And rises lightly from the bed ;
 Puts on her silken vestments white,
 And tricks her hair in lovely plight, 365
 And nothing doubting of her spell
 Awakens the lady Christabel.
 ' Sleep you, sweet lady Christabel ?
 I trust that you have rested well.'

And Christabel awoke and spied 370
 The same who lay down by her side—
 O rather say, the same whom she Raised up beneath the old oak tree !
 Nay, fairer yet ! and yet more fair !
 For she belike hath drunken deep 375
 Of all the blessedness of sleep !
 And while she spake, her looks, her air
 Such gentle thankfulness declare,
 That (so it seemed) her girded vests
 Grew tight beneath her heaving breasts. 380
 ' Sure I have sinn'd ! ' said Christabel,
 ' Now heaven be praised if all be well ! '

And in low faltering tones, yet sweet,
 Did she the lofty lady greet
 With such perplexity of mind 385
 As dreams too lively leave behind.

So quickly she rose, and quickly arrayed
 Her maiden limbs, and having prayed
 That He, who on the cross did groan,
 Might wash away her sins unknown, 390
 She forthwith led fair Geraldine
 To meet her sire, Sir Leoline.

The lovely maid and the lady tall
 Are pacing both into the hall,
 And pacing on through page and groom, 395
 Enter the Baron's presence-room.

The Baron rose, and while he prest
 His gentle daughter to his breast,
 With cheerful wonder in his eyes
 The lady Geraldine espies, 400
 And gave such welcome to the same,
 As might besem so bright a dame !

But when he heard the lady's tale,
 And when she told her father's name,
 Why waxed Sir Leoline so pale, 405
 Murmuring o'er the name again,
 Lord Roland de Vaux of Tryermaine ?

Alas ! they had been friends in youth ;
 But whispering tongues can poison truth ;
 And constancy lives in realms above ; 410
 And life is thorny ; and youth is vain ;
 And to be wroth with one we love
 Doth work like madness in the brain.

And thus it chanced, as I divine,
 With Roland and Sir Leoline. 415
 Each spake words of high disdain
 And insult to his heart's best brother :
 They parted—ne'er to meet again !
 But never either found another
 To free the hollow heart from paining— 420
 They stood aloof, the scars remaining,
 Like cliffs which had been rent asunder ;
 A dreary sea now flows between ;—
 But neither heat, nor frost, nor thunder,
 Shall wholly do away, I ween, 425
 The marks of that which once hath been.

Sir Leoline, a moment's space,
 Stood gazing on the damsel's face :
 And the youthful Lord of Tryermaine
 Came back upon his heart again. 430

O then the Baron forgot his age,
 His noble heart swelled high with rage ;
 He swore by the wounds in Jesu's side
 He would proclaim it far and wide,
 With trump and solemn heraldry, 435
 That they, who thus had wronged the dame,
 Were base as spotted infamy !
 ' And if they dare deny the same,
 My herald shall appoint a week,
 And let the recreant traitors seek 440
 My tourney court—that there and then
 I may dislodge their reptile souls
 From the bodies and forms of men !'
 He spake : his eye in lightning rolls !
 For the lady was ruthlessly seized : and he kenned 445
 In the beautiful lady the child of his friend !

And now the tears were on his face,
 And fondly in his arms he took
 Fair Geraldine, who met the embrace,
 Prolonging it with joyous look. 450
 Which when she viewed, a vision fell
 Upon the soul of Christabel,
 The vision of fear, the touch and pain !
 She shrunk and shuddered, and saw again—
 (Ah, woe is me ! Was it for thee, Thou gentle maid ! such sights to see ?) 455

Again she saw that bosom old,
 Again she felt that bosom cold,
 And drew in her breath with a hissing sound :
 Whereat the Knight turned wildly round, 460
 And nothing saw, but his own sweet maid
 With eyes upraised, as one that prayed.

The touch, the sight, had passed away,
 And in its stead that vision blest,
 Which comforted her after-rest 465
 While in the lady's arms she lay,
 Had put a rapture in her breast,
 And on her lips and o'er her eyes
 Spread smiles like light !

With new surprise,
 ' What ails then my beloved child ? ' 470
 The Baron said—His daughter mild
 Made answer, ' All will yet be well ! '
 I ween, she had no power to tell
 Aught else : so mighty was the spell. •

Yet he, who saw this Geraldine, 475
 Had deemed her sure a thing divine :
 Such sorrow with such grace she blended,
 As if she feared she had offended

Sweet Christabel, that gentle maid !
 And with such lowly tones she prayed 480
 She might be sent without delay
 Home to her father's mansion.

‘ Nay !

Nay, by my soul ! ’ said Leoline.
 ‘ Ho ! Bracy the bard, the charge be thine !
 Go thou, with music sweet and loud, 485
 And take two steeds with trappings proud,
 And take the youth whom thou lov'st best
 To bear thy harp, and learn thy song,
 And clothe you both in solemn vest,
 And over the mountains haste along, 490
 Lest wandering folk, that are abroad,
 Detain you on the valley road.

‘ And when he has crossed the Irthing flood,
 My merry bard ! he hastes, he hastes
 Up Knorren Moor, through Halegarth Wood, 495
 And reaches soon that castle good
 Which stands and threatens Scotland's wastes.

‘ Bard Bracy ! bard Bracy ! your horses are fleet,
 Ye must ride up the hall, your music so sweet,
 More loud than your horses' echoing feet ! 500
 And loud and loud to Lord Roland call,
 Thy daughter is safe in Langdale hall !
 Thy beautiful daughter is safe and free—
 Sir Leoline greets thee thus through me !
 He bids thee come without delay 505
 With all thy numerous array
 And take thy lovely daughter home :
 And he will meet thee on the way
 With all his numerous array
 White with their panting palfreys' foam : 510

And, by mine honour ! I will say
 That I repent me of the day
 When I spake words of fierce disdain
 To Roland de Vaux of Tryermaine !—
 —For since that evil hour hath flown, 515
 Many a summer's sun hath shone ;
 Yet ne'er found I a friend again
 Like Roland de Vaux of Tryermaine.'

The lady fell, and clasped his knees,
 Her face upraised, her eyes o'erflowing ; 520
 And Bracy replied, with faltering voice,
 His gracious Hail on all bestowing !—
 ' Thy words, thou sire of Christabel,
 Are sweeter than my harp can tell ;
 Yet might I gain a boon of thee, 525
 This day my journey should not be,
 So strange a dream hath come to me,
 That I had vowed with music loud
 To clear yon wood from thing unblest,
 Warned by a vision in my rest ! 530
 For in my sleep I saw that dove,
 That gentle bird, whom thou dost love,
 And call'st by thy own daughter's name—
 Sir Leoline ! I saw the same
 Fluttering, and uttering fearful moan, 535
 Among the green herbs in the forest alone.
 Which when I saw and when I heard,
 I wonder'd what might ail the bird ;
 For nothing near it could I see,
 Save the grass and green herbs underneath the old tree.

' And in my dream methought I went 541
 To search out what might there be found ;
 And what the sweet bird's trouble meant,
 That thus lay fluttering on the ground.

I went and peered, and could descry 545
 No cause for her distressful cry ;
 But yet for her dear lady's sake
 I stooped, methought, the dove to take,
 When lo ! I saw a bright green snake
 Coiled around its wings and neck. 550
 Green as the herbs on which it couched,
 Close by the dove's its head it crouched ;
 And with the dove it heaves and stirs,
 Swelling its neck as she swelled hers !
 I woke ; it was the midnight hour, 555
 The clock was echoing in the tower ;
 But though my slumber was gone by,
 This dream it would not pass away—
 It seems to live upon my eye !
 And thence I vowed this self-same day 560
 With music strong and saintly song
 To wander through the forest bare,
 Lest aught unholy loiter there.'

Thus Bracy said : the Baron, the while,
 Half-listening heard him with a smile ; 565
 Then turned to Lady Geraldine,
 His eyes made up of wonder and love ;
 And said in courtly accents fine,
 ' Sweet maid, Lord Roland's beauteous dove,
 With arms more strong than harp or song, 570
 Thy sire and I will crush the snake ! '
 He kissed her forehead as he spake,
 And Geraldine in maiden wise
 Casting down her large bright eyes,
 With blushing cheek and courtesy fine 575
 She turned her from Sir Leoline ;
 Softly gathering up her train,
 That o'er her right arm fell again ;

And folded her arms across her chest,
 And couched her head upon her breast, 580
 And looked askance at Christabel——
 Jesu, Maria, shield her well !

A snake's small eye blinks dull and shy ;
 And the lady's eyes they shrunk in her head,
 Each shrunk up to a serpent's eye, 585
 And with somewhat of malice, and more of dread,
 At Christabel she looked askance !—
 One moment—and the sight was fled !
 But Christabel in dizzy trance
 Stumbling on the unsteady ground 590
 Shuddered aloud, with a hissing sound ;
 And Geraldine again turned round,
 And like a thing, that sought relief,
 Full of wonder and full of grief,
 She rolled her large bright eyes divine 595
 Wildly on Sir Leoline.

The maid, alas ! her thoughts are gone,
 She nothing sees—no sight but one !
 The maid, devoid of guile and sin,
 I know not how, in fearful wise, 600
 So deeply had she drunken in
 That look, those shrunken serpent eyes,
 That all her features were resigned
 To this sole image in her mind :
 And passively did imitate 605
 That look of dull and treacherous hate !
 And thus she stood, in dizzy trance,
 Still picturing that look askance
 With forced unconscious sympathy
 Full before her father's view—— 610
 As far as such a look could be
 In eyes so innocent and, blue !

And when the trance was o'er, the maid
 Paused awhile, and inly prayed :
 Then falling at the Baron's feet, 615
 ' By my mother's soul do I entreat
 That thou this woman send away !'
 She said : and more she could not say :
 For what she knew she could not tell,
 O'er-mastered by the mighty spell. 620

Why is thy cheek so wan and wild,
 Sir Leoline ? Thy only child
 Lies at thy feet, thy joy, thy pride.
 So fair, so innocent, so mild ;
 The same, for whom thy lady died ! 625
 O by the pangs of her dear mother
 Think thou no evil of thy child !
 For her, and thee, and for no other,
 She prayed the moment ere she died :
 Prayed that the babe for whom she died, 630
 Might prove her dear lord's joy and pride !
 That prayer her deadly pangs beguiled,
 Sir Leoline !

And wouldst thou wrong thy only child,
 Her child and thine ? 635

Within the Baron's heart and brain
 If thoughts, like these, had any share,
 They only swelled his rage and pain,
 And did but work confusion there.
 His heart was cleft with pain and rage, 640
 His cheeks they quivered, his eyes were wild,
 Dishonoured thus in his old age ;
 Dishonoured by his only child,
 And all his hospitality
 To the wronged daughter of his friend , 645
 By more than woman's jealousy
 Brought thus to a disgraceful end—

He rolled his eye with stern regard
 Upon the gentle minstrel bard,
 And said in tones abrupt, austere— 650
 ‘ Why, Bracy ! dost thou loiter here ?
 I bade thee hence ! ’ The bard obeyed ;
 And turning from his own sweet maid,
 The agéd knight, Sir Leoline,
 Led forth the lady Geraldine ! 655

THE CONCLUSION TO PART II

A little child, a limber elf,
 Singing, dancing to itself,
 A fairy thing with red round cheeks,
 That always finds, and never seeks,
 Makes such a vision to the sight 660
 As fills a father's eyes with light ;
 And pleasures flow in so thick and fast
 Upon his heart, that he at last
 Must needs express his love's excess
 With words of unmeant bitterness. 665
 Perhaps 'tis pretty to force together
 Thoughts so all unlike each other ;
 To mutter and mock a broken charm,
 To dally with wrong that does no harm.
 Perhaps 'tis tender too and pretty 670
 At each wild word to feel within
 A sweet recoil of love and pity.
 And what, if in a world of sin
 (O sorrow and shame should this be true !)
 Such giddiness of heart and brain 675
 Comes seldom save from rage and pain,
 So talks as it 's most used to do.

Frost at Midnight

Composed February 1798.—Published 1798

THE Frost performs its secret ministry,
 Unhelped by any wind. The owlet's cry
 Came loud—and hark, again ! loud as before.
 The inmates of my cottage, all at rest,
 Have left me to that solitude, which suits 5
 Abstruser musings : save that at my side
 My cradled infant slumbers peacefully.
 'Tis calm indeed ! so calm, that it disturbs
 And vexes meditation with its strange
 And extreme silentness. Sea, hill, and wood, 10
 This populous village ! Sea, and hill, and wood,
 With all the numberless goings-on of life,
 Inaudible as dreams ! the thin blue flame
 Lies on my low-burnt fire, and quivers not ;
 Only that film, which fluttered on the grate, 15
 Still flutters there, the sole unquiet thing.
 Methinks, its motion in this hush of nature
 Gives it dim sympathies with me who live,
 Making it a companionable form,
 Whose puny flaps and freaks the idling Spirit 20
 By its own moods interprets, every where
 Echo or mirror seeking of itself,
 And makè's a toy of Thought.

But O ! how oft,
 How oft, at school, with most believing mind,
 Presageful, have I gazed upon the bars, 25
 To watch that fluttering stranger ! and as oft
 With unclosed lids, already had I dreamt
 Of my sweet birth-place, and the old church-tower,
 Whose bells, the poor man's only music, rang

From morn to evening, all the hot Fair-day, 30
 So sweetly, that they stirred and haunted me
 With a wild pleasure, falling on mine ear
 Most like articulate sounds of things to come !
 So gazed I, till the soothing things I dreamt
 Lulled me to sleep, and sleep prolonged my dreams ! 35
 And so I brooded all the following morn,
 Awed by the stern preceptor's face, mine eye
 Fixed with mock study on my swimming book :
 Save if the door half opened, and I snatched
 A hasty glance, and still my heart leaped up, 40
 For still I hoped to see the stranger's face,
 Townsman, or aunt, or sister more beloved,
 My play-mate when we both were clothed alike !

Dear Babe, that sleepest cradled by my side,
 Whose gentle breathings, heard in this deep calm, 45
 Fill up the interspersed vacancies
 And momentary pauses of the thought !
 My babe so beautiful ! it thrills my heart
 With tender gladness, thus to look at thee,
 And think that thou shalt learn far other lore, 50
 And in far other scenes ! For I was reared
 In the great city, pent 'mid cloisters dim,
 And saw nought lovely but the sky and stars.
 But thou, my babe ! shalt wander like a breeze
 By lakes and sandy shores, beneath the crags 55
 Of ancient mountain, and beneath the clouds,
 Which image in their bulk both lakes and shores
 And mountain crags : so shalt thou see and hear
 The lovely shapes and sounds intelligible
 Of that eternal language, which thy God 60
 Utters, who from eternity doth teach
 Himself in all, and all things in himself.
 Great universal Teacher ! he shall mould
 Thy spirit, and by giving make it ask.

Therefore all seasons shall be sweet to thee, 65
 Whether the summer clothe the general earth
 With greenness, or the redbreast sit and sing
 Betwixt the tufts of snow on the bare branch
 Of mossy apple-tree, while the nigh thatch
 Smokes in the sun-thaw ; whether the eave-drops fall 70
 Heard only in the trances of the blast,
 Or if the secret ministry of frost
 Shall hang them up in silent icicles,
 Quietly shining to the quiet Moon.

France: An Ode

Composed February 1798.—Published in The Morning Post, 16 April 1798

I

YE Clouds ! that far above me float and pause,
 Whose pathless march no mortal may controul !
 Ye Ocean-Waves ! that, wheresoe'er ye roll,
 Yield homage only to eternal laws !
 Ye Woods ! that listen to the night-birds singing, 5
 Midway the smooth and perilous slope reclined,
 Save when your own imperious branches swinging
 Have made a solemn music of the wind !
 Where, like a man beloved of God,
 Through glooms, which never woodman trod, 10
 How oft, pursuing fancies holy,
 My moonlight way o'er flowering weeds I wound,
 Inspired, beyond the guess of folly,
 By each rude shape and wild unconquerable sound !
 O ye loud Waves ! and O ye Forests high ! 15
 And O ye Clouds that far above me soared !
 Thou rising Sun ! thou blue rejoicing Sky !

Yea, every thing that is and will be free !
 Bear witness for me, whereso'er ye be,
 With what deep worship I have still adored 20
 The spirit of divinest Liberty.

II

When France in wrath her giant-limbs upreared,
 And with that oath, which smote air, earth, and sea,
 Stamped her strong foot and said she would be free,
 Bear witness for me, how I hoped and feared ! 25
 With what a joy my lofty gratulation
 Unawed I sang, amid a slavish band :
 And when to whelm the disenchanted nation,
 Like fiends embattled by a wizard's wand,
 The Monarchs marched in evil day, 30
 And Britain joined the dire array ;
 Though dear her shores and circling ocean,
 Though many friendships, many youthful loves
 Had swoln the patriot emotion
 And flung a magic light o'er all her hills and groves ; 35
 Yet still my voice, unaltered, sang defeat
 To all that braved the tyrant-quelling lance,
 And shame too long delayed and vain retreat !
 For ne'er, O Liberty ! with partial aim
 I dimmed thy light or damped thy holy flame ; 40
 But blessed the pacans of delivered France,
 And hung my head and wept at Britain's name.

III

' And what,' I said, ' though Blasphemy's loud scream
 With that sweet music of deliverance strove !
 Though all the fierce and drunken passions wove 45
 A dance more wild than e'er was maniac's dream !

Ye storms, that round the dawning East assembled,
 The Sun was rising, though ye hid his light ! '
 And when, to soothe my soul, that hoped and trembled,
 The dissonance ceased, and all seemed calm and bright ; 50
 When France her front deep-scarr'd and gory
 Concealed with clustering wreaths of glory ;
 When, insupportably advancing,
 Her arm made mockery of the warrior's ramp ;
 While timid looks of fury glancing, 55
 Domestic treason, crushed beneath her fatal stamp,
 Writhed like a wounded dragon in his gore ;
 Then I reproached my fears that would not flee ;
 ' And soon,' I said, ' shall Wisdom teach her lore
 In the low huts of them that toil and groan ! 60
 And, conquering by her happiness alone,
 Shall France compel the nations to be free,
 Till Love and Joy look round, and call the Earth their own.'

IV

Forgive me, Freedom ! O forgive those dreams !
 I hear thy voice, I hear thy loud lament, 65
 From bleak Helvetia's icy caverns sent—
 I hear thy groans upon her blood-stained streams !
 Heroes, that for your peaceful country perished
 And ye that, fleeing, spot your mountain-snows
 With bleeding wounds ; forgive me, that I cherished 70
 One thought that ever blessed your cruel foes !
 To scatter rage, and traitorous guilt,
 Where Peace her jealous home had built ;
 A patriot-race to disinherit
 Of all that made their stormy wilds so dear ; 75
 And with inexpiable spirit
 To taint the bloodless freedom of the mountaineer—

O France, that mockest Heaven, adulterous, blind,
 And patriot only in pernicious toils !
 Was this thy boast, Champion of human kind, 80
 To mix with Kings in the low lust of sway,
 Yell in the hunt, and share the murderous prey ;
 To insult the shrine of Liberty with spoils
 From freemen torn ; to tempt and to betray ?

V

The Sensual and the Dark rebel in vain, 85
 Slaves by their own compulsion ! In mad game
 They burst their manacles and wear the name
 Of Freedom, graven on a heavier chain !
 O Liberty ! with profitless endeavour
 Have I pursued thee, many a weary hour ; 90
 But thou nor swell'st the victor's strain, nor ever
 Didst breathe thy soul in forms of human power.
 Alike from all, howe'er they praise thee
 (Nor prayer nor boastful name delays thee),
 Alike from Priestcraft's harpy minions, 95
 And factious Blasphemy's obscene slaves,
 Thou speedest on thy subtle pinions,
 The guide of homeless winds, and playmate of the waves !
 And there I felt thee !—on that sea-cliff's verge,
 Whose pines, scarce travelled by the breeze above, 100
 Had made one murmur with the distant surge !
 Yes, while I stood and gazed, my temples bare,
 And shot my being through earth, sea, and air,
 Possessing all things with intensest love,
 O Liberty ! my spirit felt thee there. 105

Fears in Solitude

Written in April 1798

During the Alarm of an Invasion

Published 1798

A GREEN and silent spot, amid the hills,
 A small and silent dell ! O'er stiller place
 No singing sky-lark ever poised himself.
 The hills are heathy, save that swelling slope,
 Which hath a gay and gorgeous covering on, 5
 All golden with the never-bloomless furze,
 Which now blooms most profusely : but the dell,
 Bathed by the mist, is fresh and delicate
 As vernal corn-field, or the unripe flax,
 When, through its half-transparent stalks, at eve, 10
 The level sunshine glimmers with green light.
 Oh ! 'tis a quiet spirit-healing nook !
 Which all, methinks, would love ; but chiefly he,
 The humble man, who, in his youthful years,
 Knew just so much of folly, as had made 15
 His early manhood more securely wise !
 Here he might lie on fern or withered heath,
 While from the singing lark (that sings unseen
 The minstrelsy that solitude loves best),
 And from the sun, and from the breezy air, 20
 Sweet influences trembled o'er his frame ;
 And he, with many feelings, many thoughts,
 Made up a meditative joy, and found
 Religious meanings in the forms of Nature !
 And so, his senses gradually wrapt 25
 In a half sleep, he dreams 'of better worlds,

And dreaming hears thee still, O singing lark,
That singest like an angel in the clouds !

My God ! it is a melancholy thing
For such a man, who would full fain preserve 30
His soul in calmness, yet perforce must feel
For all his human brethren—O my God !
It weighs upon the heart, that he must think
What uproar and what strife may now be stirring
This way or that way o'er these silent hills— 35
Invasion, and the thunder and the shout,
And all the crash of onset ; fear and rage,
And undetermined conflict—even now,
Even now, perchance, and in his native isle :
Carnage and groans beneath this blessed sun ! 40
We have offended, Oh ! my countrymen !
We have offended very grievously,
And been most tyrannous. From east to west
A groan of accusation pierces Heaven !
The wretched plead against us ; multitudes 45
Countless and vehement, the sons of God,
Our brethren ! Like a cloud that travels on,
Steamed up from Cairo's swamps of pestilence,
Even so, my countrymen ! have we gone forth
And borne to distant tribes slavery and pangs, 50
And, deadlier far, our vices, whose deep taint
With slow perdition murders the whole man,
His body and his soul ! Meanwhile, at home,
All individual dignity and power
Engulfed in Courts, Committees, Institutions, 55
Associations and Societies,
A vain, speech-mouthing, speech-reporting Guild,
One Benefit-Club for mutual flattery,
We have drunk up, demure as at a grace,
Pollutions from the brimming cup of wealth ; 60
Contemptuous of all honourable rule,

Yet bartering freedom and the poor man's life
 For gold, as at a market ! The sweet words
 Of Christian promise, words that even yet
 Might stem destruction, were they wisely preached, 65
 Are muttered o'er by men, whose tones proclaim
 How flat and wearisome they feel their trade :
 Rank scoffers some, but most too indolent
 To deem them falsehoods or to know their truth.
 Oh ! blasphemous ! the Book of Life is made 70
 A superstitious instrument, on which
 We gabble o'er the oaths we mean to break ;
 For all must swear—all and in every place,
 College and wharf, council and justice-court ;
 All, all must swear, the briber and the bribed, 75
 Merchant and lawyer, senator and priest,
 The rich, the poor, the old man and the young ;
 All, all make up one scheme of perjury,
 That faith doth reel ; the very name of God
 Sounds like a juggler's charm ; and, bold with joy, 80
 Forth from his dark and lonely hiding-place,
 (Portentous sight !) the owlet Atheism,
 Sailing on obscene wings athwart the noon,
 Drops his blue-fringéd lids, and holds them close,
 And hooting at the glorious sun in Heaven, 85
 Cries out, ' Where is it ? '

Thankless too for peace
 (Peace long preserved by fleets and perilous seas),
 Secure from actual warfare, we have loved
 To swell the war-whoop, passionate for war !
 Alas ! for ages ignorant of all 90
 Its ghastlier workings, (famine or blue plague, Battle, or siege, or flight through wintry snows,)
 We, this whole people, have been clamorous,
 For war and bloodshed ; aninating sports,

The which we pay for as a thing to talk of, 95
 Spectators and not combatants ! No guess
 Anticipative of a wrong unfelt,
 No speculation on contingency,
 However dim and vague, too vague and dim
 To yield a justifying cause ; and forth, 100
 (Stuffed out with big preamble, holy names,
 And adjurations of the God in Heaven,)

We send our mandates for the certain death
 Of thousands and ten thousands ! Boys and girls,
 And women, that would groan to see a child 105
 Pull off an insect's leg, all read of war,
 The best amusement for our morning meal !
 The poor wretch, who has learnt his only prayers
 From curses, who knows scarcely words enough
 To ask a blessing from his Heavenly Father, 110
 Becomes a fluent phraseman, absolute
 And technical in victories and defeats,
 And all our dainty terms for fratricide ;
 Terms which we trundle smoothly o'er our tongues
 Like mere abstractions, empty sounds to which 115
 We join no feeling and attach no form !
 As if the soldier died without a wound ;
 As if the fibres of this godlike frame
 Were gored without a pang ; as if the wretch,
 Who fell in battle, doing bloody deeds, 120
 Passed off to Heaven, translated and not killed ;
 As though he had no wife to pine for him,
 No God to judge him ! Therefore, evil days
 Are coming on us, O my countrymen !
 And what if all-avenging Providence, 125
 Strong and retributive, should make us know
 The meaning of our words, force us to feel
 The desolation and the agony
 Of our fierce doings ?

Spare us yet awhile,

Father and God ! O ! spare us yet awhile ! 130
 Oh ! let not English women drag their flight
 Fainting beneath the burthen of their babes,
 Of the sweet infants, that but yesterday
 Laughed at the breast ! Sons, brothers, husbands, all
 Who ever gazed with fondness on the forms 135
 Which grew up with you round the same fire-side,
 And all who ever heard the sabbath-bells
 Without the infidel's scorn, make yourselves pure !
 Stand forth ! be men ! repel an impious foe,
 Impious and false, a light yet cruel race, 140
 Who laugh away all virtue, mingling mirth
 With deeds of murder ; and still promising
 Freedom, themselves too sensual to be free
 Poison life's amities, and cheat the heart
 Of faith and quiet hope, and all that soothes, 145
 And all that lifts the spirit ! Stand we forth ;
 Render them back upon the insulted ocean,
 And let them toss as idly on its waves
 As the vile sea-weed, which some mountain-blast
 Swept from our shores ! And oh ! may we return 150
 Not with a drunken triumph, but with fear,
 Repenting of the wrongs with which we stung
 So fierce a foe to frenzy !

I have told,

O Britons ! O my brethren ! I have told
 Most bitter truth, but without bitterness. 155
 Nor deem my zeal or factious or mistimed ;
 For never can true courage dwell with them,
 Who, playing tricks with conscience, dare not look
 At their own vices. We have been too long Dupes of a deep delusion ! Some, belike, 160
 Groaning with restless enmity, expect

All change from change of constituted power ;
 As if a Government had been a robe,
 On which our vice and wretchedness were tagged
 Like fancy-points and fringes, with the robe 165
 Pulled off at pleasure. Fondly these attach
 A radical causation to a few
 Poor drudges of chastising Providence,
 Who borrow all their hues and qualities
 From our own folly and rank wickedness, 170
 Which gave them birth and nursed them. Others, meanwhile,
 Dote with a mad idolatry ; and all
 Who will not fall before their images,
 And yield them worship, they are enemies
 Even of their country !

Such have I been deemed.— 175
 But, O dear Britain ! O my Mother Isle !
 Needs must thou prove a name most dear and holy
 To me, a son, a brother, and a friend,
 A husband, and a father ! who revere
 All bonds of natural love, and find them all 180
 Within the limits of thy rocky shores.
 O native Britain ! O my Mother Isle !
 How shouldst thou prove aught else but dear and holy
 To me, who from thy lakes and mountain-hills,
 Thy clouds, thy quiet dales, thy rocks and seas, 185
 Have drunk in all my intellectual life,
 All sweet sensations, all ennobling thoughts,
 All adoration of the God in nature,
 All lovely and all honourable things,
 Whatever makes this mortal spirit feel 190
 The joy and greatness of its future being ?
 There lives nor form nor feeling in my soul
 Unborrowed from my country ! O divine
 And beauteous island ! thou hast been my sole

And most magnificent temple, in the which 195
 I walk with awe, and sing my stately songs,
 Loving the God that made me !—

May my fears,
 My filial fears, be vain ! and may the vaunts
 And menace of the vengeful enemy
 Pass like the gust, that roared and died away 200
 In the distant tree : which heard, and only heard
 In this low dell, bowed not the delicate grass.

But now the gentle dew-fall sends abroad
 The fruit-like perfume of the golden furze :
 The light has left the summit of the hill, 205
 Though still a sunny gleam lies beautiful,
 Aslant the ivied beacon. Now farewell,
 Farewell, awhile, O soft and silent spot !
 On the green sheep-track, up the heathy hill,
 Homeward I wind my way ; and lo ! recalled 210
 From bodings that have well-nigh wearied me,
 I find myself upon the brow, and pause
 Startled ! And after lonely sojourning
 In such a quiet and surrounded nook,
 This burst of prospect, here the shadowy main, 215
 Dim-tinted, there the mighty majesty
 Of that huge amphitheatre of rich
 And elmy fields, seems like society—
 Conversing with the mind, and giving it
 A livelier impulse and a dance of thought ! 220
 And now, belovéd Stowey ! I behold
 Thy church-tower, and, methinks, the four huge elms
 Clustering, which mark the mansion of my friend ;
 And close behind them, hidden from my view,
 Is my own lowly cottage, where my babe 225
 And my babe's mother dwell in peace ! With light

And quickened footsteps thitherward I tend,
 Remembering thee, O green and silent dell !
 And grateful, that by nature's quietness
 And solitary musings, all my heart 230
 Is softened, and made worthy to indulge
 Love, and the thoughts that yearn for human kind.

The Nightingale

A Conversation Poem, April 1798

Published in Lyrical Ballads, 1798

No cloud, no relique of the sunken day
 Distinguishes the West, no long thin slip
 Of sullen light, no obscure trembling hues.
 Come, we will rest on this old mossy bridge !
 You see the glimmer of the stream beneath, 5
 But hear no murmuring : it flows silently,
 O'er its soft bed of verdure. All is still,
 A balmy night ! and though the stars be dim,
 Yet let us think upon the vernal showers
 That gladden the green earth, and we shall find 10
 A pleasure in the dimness of the stars.
 And hark ! the Nightingale begins its song,
 ' Most musical, most melancholy ' bird !
 A melancholy bird ? Oh ! idle thought !
 In Nature there is nothing melancholy. 15
 But some night-wandering man whose heart was pierced
 With the remembrance of a grievous wrong,
 Or slow distemper, or neglected love
 (And so, poor wretch ! filled all things with himself,
 And made all gentle sounds tell back the tale 20
 Of his own sorrow), he, and such as he,
 First named these notes a melancholy strain.

And many a poet echoes the conceit ;
 Poet who hath been building up the rhyme
 When he had better far have stretched his limbs 25
 Beside a brook in mossy forest-dell,
 By sun or moon-light, to the influxes
 Of shapes and sounds and shifting elements
 Surrendering his whole spirit, of his song
 And of his fame forgetful ! so his fame 30
 Should share in Nature's immortality,
 A venerable thing ! and so his song
 Should make all Nature lovelier, and itself
 Be loved like Nature ! But 'twill not be so ;
 And youths and maidens most poetical, 35
 Who lose the deepening twilights of the spring
 In ball-rooms and hot theatres, they still Full of meek sympathy must heave their sighs
 O'er Philomela's pity-pleading strains.

My Friend, and thou, our Sister ! we have learnt 40
 A different lore : we may not thus profane
 Nature's sweet voices, always full of love
 And joyance ! 'Tis the merry Nightingale
 That crowds, and hurries, and precipitates
 With fast thick warble his delicious notes, 45
 As he were fearful that an April night
 Would be too short for him to utter forth
 His love-chant, and disburthen his full soul
 Of all its music !

And I know a grove
 Of large extent, hard by a castle huge, 50
 Which the great lord inhabits not ; and so
 This grove is wild with tangling underwood,
 And the trim walks are broken up, and grass,
 Thin grass and king-cups grow within the paths.
 But never elsewhere in one place I knew 55

So many nightingales ; and far and near,
 In wood and thicket, over the wide grove,
 They answer and provoke each other's song,
 With skirmish and capricious passagings,
 And murmurs musical and swift jug jug, 60
 And one low piping sound more sweet than all—
 Stirring the air with such a harmony,
 That should you close your eyes, you might almost Forget it was not day ! On moonlight bushes,
 Whose dewy leaflets are but half-disclosed, 65
 You may perchance behold them on the twigs,
 Their bright, bright eyes, their eyes both bright and full,
 Glistening, while many a glow-worm in the shade
 Lights up her love-torch.

A most gentle Maid,
 Who dwelleth in her hospitable home 70
 Hard by the castle, and at latest eve
 (Even like a Lady vowed and dedicate
 To something more than Nature in the grove)
 Glides through the pathways ; she knows all their notes,
 That gentle Maid ! and oft, a moment's space, 75
 What time the moon was lost behind a cloud,
 Hath heard a pause of silence ; till the moon
 Emerging, hath awakened earth and sky
 With one sensation, and those wakeful birds
 Have all burst forth in choral minstrelsy, 80
 As if some sudden gale had swept at once
 A hundred airy harps ! And she hath watched
 Many a nightingale perch giddily
 On blossomy twig still swinging from the breeze,
 And to that motion tune his wanton song 85
 Like tipsy Joy that reels with tossing head.

Farewell, O Warbler ! till to-morrow eve,
 And you, my friends ! farewell, a short farewell !

We have been loitering long and pleasantly,
 And now for our dear homes.—That strain again ! 90
 Full fain it would delay me ! My dear babe,
 Who, capable of no articulate sound,
 Mars all things with his imitative lisp,
 How he would place his hand beside his ear,
 His little hand, the small forefinger up, 95
 And bid us listen ! And I deem it wise
 To make him Nature's play-mate. He knows well
 The evening-star ; and once, when he awoke
 In most distressful mood (some inward pain
 Had made up that strange thing, an infant's dream) 100
 I hurried with him to our orchard-plot,
 And he beheld the moon, and, hushed at once,
 Suspends his sobs, and laughs most silently,
 While his fair eyes, that swam with undropped tears,
 Did glitter in the yellow moon-beam ! Well !— 105
 It is a father's tale : But if that Heaven
 Should give me life, his childhood shall grow up
 Familiar with these songs, that with the night
 He may associate joy.—Once more, farewell,
 Sweet Nightingale ! once more, my friends ! farewell. 110

A Fragment

Composed May (?) 1798.—Published with Chrisiabel, 1816

IN Xanadu did Kubla Khan
 A stately pleasure-dome decree :
 Where Alph, the sacred river, ran Through caverns measureless to man
 Down to a sunless sea. 5
 So twice five miles of fertile ground
 With walls and towers were girdled round :
 And there were gardens bright with sinuous rills,
 Where blossomed many an incense-bearing tree ;
 And here were forests ancient as the hills, 10
 Enfolding sunny spots of greenery.

But oh ! that deep romantic chasm which slanted
 Down the green hill athwart a cedarn cover !
 A savage place ! as holy and enchanted
 As e'er beneath a waning moon was haunted 15
 By woman wailing for her demon-lover !
 And from this chasm, with ceaseless turmoil seething,
 As if this earth in fast thick pants were breathing,
 A mighty fountain momentarily was forced :
 Amid whose swift half-intermitted burst 20
 Huge fragments vaulted like rebounding hail,
 Or chaffy grain beneath the thresher's flail :
 And 'mid these dancing rocks at once and ever
 It flung up momentarily the sacred river.
 Five miles meandering with a mazy motion 25
 Through wood and dale the sacred river ran,
 Then reached the caverns measureless to man,
 And sank in tumult to a lifeless ocean :

And 'mid this tumult Kubla heard from far
Ancestral voices prophesying war ! 30

The shadow of the dome of pleasure
Floated midway on the waves ;
Where was heard the mingled measure
From the fountain and the caves.

It was a miracle of rare device, 35
A sunny pleasure-dome with caves of ice !

A damsel with a dulcimer

In a vision once I saw :

It was an Abyssinian maid,

And on her dulcimer she played, 40

Singing of Mount Abora.

Could I revive within me

Her symphony and song,

To such a deep delight 'twould win me,
That with music loud and long, 45

I would build that dome in air,

That sunny dome ! those caves of ice !

And all who heard should see them there,

And all should cry, Beware ! Beware !

His flashing eyes, his floating hair ! 50

Weave a circle round him thrice,

And close your eyes with holy dread,

For he on honey-dew hath fed,

And drunk the milk of Paradise.

The Devil's Thoughts

Published in The Morning Post, 6 September 1799 ; included in Poetical Works, 1828

FROM his brimstone bed at break of day
A-walking the Devil is gone,
To visit his snug little farm the earth,
And see how his stock goes on.

II

Over the hill and over the dale, 5
And he went over the plain,
And backward and forward he switched his long tail
As a gentleman switches his cane.

III

And how then was the Devil drest ?
Oh ! he was in his Sunday's best : 10
His jacket was red and his breeches were blue,
And there was a hole where the tail came through.

IV

He saw a Lawyer killing a Viper
On a dunghill hard by his own stable ;
And the Devil smiled, for it put him in mind 15
Of Cain and his brother, Abel.

V

He saw an Apothecary on a white horse
Ride by on his vocations,
And the Devil thought of his old Friend 20
Death in the Revelations.

VI

He saw a cottage with a double coach-house,
 A cottage of gentility ;
 And the Devil did grin, for his darling sin
 Is pride that apes humility

He peep'd into a rich bookseller's shop, 25
 Quoth he ! we are both of one college !
 For I sate myself, like a cormorant, once
 Hard by the tree of knowledge.

VIII

Down the river did glide, with wind and tide,
 A pig with vast celerity ; 30
 And the Devil look'd wise as he saw how, the while,
 It cut its own throat. ' There ! ' quoth he with a smile, ' Goes " England's commercial prosperity." '

IX

As he went through Cold-Bath Fields he saw
 A solitary cell ; 35
 And the Devil was pleased, for it gave him a hint
 For improving his prisons in Hell.

XII

He saw an old acquaintance
 As he passed by a Methodist meeting ;—
 She holds a consecrated key,
 And the devil nods her a greeting.

XIII

She turned up her nose, and said, 50
 ' Avaunt ! my name's Religion,'
 And she looked to Mr. —
 And leered like a love-sick pigeon.

XIV

He saw a certain minister
 (A minister to his mind) 55
 Go up into a certain House,
 With a majority behind.

XV

The Devil quoted Genesis
 Like a very learned clerk,
 How 'Noah, and his creeping things' 60
 Went up into the Ark.'

XVII

General ————— burning face
 He saw with consternation,
 And back to hell his way did he take,
 For the Devil thought by a slight mistake
 It was general conflagration. 70

I stood on Brocken's sovran height, and saw
 Woods crowding upon woods, hills over hills,
 A surging scene, and only limited
 By the blue distance. Heavily my way
 Downward I dragged through fir groves evermore, 5
 Where bright green moss heaves in sepulchral forms
 Speckled with sunshine ; and, but seldom heard,
 The sweet bird's song became a hollow sound :

And the breeze, murmuring indivisibly,
 Preserved its solemn murmur most distinct 10
 From many a note of many a waterfall,
 And the brook's chatter ; 'mid whose islet-stones
 The dingy kidling with its tinkling bell
 Leaped frolicsome, or old romantic goat
 Sat, his white beard slow waving. I moved on 15
 In low and languid mood : for I had found
 That outward forms, the loftiest, still receive Their finer influence from the Life within ;—
 Fair cyphers else : fair, but of import vague
 Or unconcerning, where the heart not finds 20
 History or prophecy of friend, or child,
 Or gentle maid, our first and early love,
 Or father, or the venerable name
 Of our adoréd country ! O thou Queen,
 Thou delegated Deity of Earth, 25
 O dear, dear England ! how my longing eye
 Turned westward, shaping in the steady clouds
 Thy sands and high white cliffs !

My native Land !

Filled with the thought of thee this heart was proud,
 Yea, mine eye swam with tears : that all the view 30
 From sovran Brocken, woods and woody hills,
 Floated away, like a departing dream,
 Feeble and dim ! Stranger, these impulses
 Blame thou not lightly ; nor will I profane,
 With hasty judgement or injurious doubt, 35
 That man's sublimer spirit, who can feel
 That God is everywhere ! the God who framed Mankind to be one mighty family,
 Himself our Father, and the World our Home.

Love

Published in Lyrical Ballads, 1800; an earlier version in The Morning Post, 21 December 1799

ALL thoughts, all passions, all delights,
 Whatever stirs this mortal frame,
 All are but ministers of Love,
 And feed his sacred flame.

Oft in my waking dreams do I 5
 Live o'er again that happy hour,
 When midway on the mount I lay,
 Beside the ruined tower.

The moonshine, stealing o'er the scene 10
 Had blended with the lights of eve;
 And she was there, my hope, my joy,
 My own dear Genevieve!

She leant against the arméd man,
 The statue of the arméd knight;
 She stood and listened to my lay, 15
 Amid the lingering light.

Few sorrows hath she of her own,
 My hope! my joy! my Genevieve!
 She loves me best, whene'er I sing 20
 The songs that make her grieve.

I played a soft and doleful air,
 I sang an old and moving story—
 An old rude song, that suited well
 That ruin wild and hoary.

She listened with a flitting blush, 25
 With downcast eyes and modest grace ;
 For well she knew, I could not choose
 But gaze upon her face.

I told her of the Knight that wore
 Upon his shield a burning brand ; 30
 And that for ten long years he wooed
 The Lady of the Land.

I told her how he pined : and ah !
 The deep, the low, the pleading tone
 With which I sang another's love, 35
 Interpreted my own.

She listened with a flitting blush,
 With downcast eyes, and modest grace ;
 And she forgave me, that I gazed
 Too fondly on her face ! 40

But when I told the cruel scorn
 That crazed that bold and lovely Knight,
 And that he crossed the mountain-woods,
 Nor rested day nor night ;

That sometimes from the savage den, 45
 And sometimes from the darksome shade,
 And sometimes starting up at once
 In green and sunny glade,—

There came and looked him in the face
 An angel beautiful and bright ; 50
 And that he knew it was a Fiend,
 This miserable Knight !

And that unknowing what he did,
 He leaped amid a murderous band,
 And saved from outrage worse than death 55
 The Lady of the Land !

- And how she wept, and clasped his knees ;
 And how she tended him in vain—
 And ever strove to expiate
 The scorn that crazed his brain ;— 60
- And that she nursed him in a cave ;
 And how his madness went away,
 When on the yellow forest-leaves
 A dying man he lay ;—
- His dying words—but when I reached 65
 That tenderest strain of all the ditty,
 My faltering voice and pausing harp
 Disturbed her soul with pity !
- All impulses of soul and sense
 Had thrilled my guileless Genevieve ; 70
 The music and the doleful tale,
 The rich and balmy eve ;
- And hopes, and fears that kindle hope,
 An undistinguishable throng,
 And gentle wishes long subdued, 75
 Subdued and cherished long !
- She wept with pity and delight,
 She blushed with love, and virgin-shame ;
 And like the murmur of a dream,
 I heard her breathe my name. 80
- Her bosom heaved—she stepped aside,
 As conscious of my look she stepped—
 Then suddenly, with timorous eye
 She fled to me and wept.
- She half enclosed me with her arms, 85
 She pressed me with a meek embrace ;
 And bending back her head, looked up,
 And gazed upon my face.

'Twas partly love, and partly fear,
 And partly 'twas a bashful art, 90
 That I might rather feel, than see,
 The swelling of her heart.

I calmed her fears, and she was calm,
 And told her love with virgin pride ;
 And so I won my Genevieve, 95
 My bright and beaucous Bride.

Dejection: An Ode

[Written April 4, 1802]

Published in The Morning Post, 4 October 1802 ;
 included in Sibylline Leaves, 1817

Late, late yestreen I saw the new Moon,
 With the old Moon in her arms ;
 And I fear, I fear, my Master dear !
 We shall have a deadly storm.
 Ballad of Sir Patrick Spence.

I

WELL ! If the Bard was weather-wise, who made
 The grand old ballad of Sir Patrick Spence,
 This night, so tranquil now, will not go hence
 Unroused by winds, that ply a busier trade
 Than those which mould yon cloud in lazy flakes, 5
 Or the dull sobbing draft, that moans and rakes
 Upon the strings of this Aeolian lute,
 Which better far were mute.
 For lo ! the New-moon winter-bright !
 And overspread with phantom light 10
 (With swimming phantom light o'erspread
 But rimmed and circled by a silver thread).

I see the old Moon in her lap, foretelling
 The coming-on of rain and squally blast.
 And oh ! that even now the gust were swelling, 15
 And the slant night-shower driving loud and fast !
 Those sounds which oft have raised me, whilst they awed,
 And sent my soul abroad,
 Might now perhaps their wonted impulse give,
 Might startle this dull pain, and make it move and live ! 20

II

A grief without a pang, void, dark, and drear,
 A stifled, drowsy, unimpassioned grief,
 Which finds no natural outlet, no relief,
 In word, or sigh, or tear—
 O Lady ! in this wan and heartless mood, 25
 To other thoughts by yonder throstle woo'd,
 All this long eve, so balmy and serene,
 Have I been gazing on the western sky,
 And its peculiar tint of yellow green :
 And still I gaze--and with how blank an eye ! 30
 And those thin clouds above, in flakes and bars,
 That give away their motion to the stars ;
 Those stars, that glide behind them or between,
 Now sparkling, now bedimmed, but always seen :
 Yon crescent Moon, as fixed as if it grew 35
 In its own cloudless, starless lake of blue ;
 I see them all so excellently fair,
 I see, not feel, how beautiful they are !

III

My genial spirits fail ;
 And what can these avail 40
 To lift the smothering weight from off my breast ?
 It were a vain endeavour,
 Though I should gaze for ever

On that green light that lingers in the west :
 I may not hope from outward forms to win 45
 The passion and the life, whose fountains are within.

IV

O Lady ! we receive but what we give,
 And in our life alone does Nature live :
 Ours is her wedding garment, ours her shroud !
 And would we aught behold, of higher worth, 50
 Than that inanimate cold world allowed
 To the poor loveless ever-anxious crowd,
 Ah ! from the soul itself must issue forth
 A light, a glory, a fair luminous cloud
 Enveloping the Earth— 55
 And from the soul itself must there be sent
 A sweet and potent voice, of its own birth,
 Of all sweet sounds the life and element !

V

O pure of heart ! thou need'st not ask of me
 What this strong music in the soul may be ! 60
 What, and wherein it doth exist,
 This light, this glory, this fair luminous mist,
 This beautiful and beauty-making power.
 Joy, virtuous Lady ! Joy that ne'er was given,
 Save to the pure, and in their purest hour, 65
 Life, and Life's effluence, cloud at once and shower,
 Joy, Lady ! is the spirit and the power,
 Which, wedding Nature to us, gives in dower
 A new Earth and new Heaven,
 Undreamt of by the sensual and the proud : 70
 Joy is the sweet voice, Joy the luminous cloud :
 We in ourselves rejoice !
 And thence flows all that charms our ear or sight,
 All melodies the echoes of that voice,
 All colours a suffusion from that light. 75

VI

There was a time when, though my path was rough,
 This joy within me dallied with distress,
 And all misfortunes were but as the stuff
 Whence Fancy made me dreams of happiness :
 For hope grew round me, like the twining vine, 80
 And fruits, and foliage, not my own, seemed mine.
 But now afflictions bow me down to earth ;
 Nor care I that they rob me of my mirth ;
 But oh ! each visitation
 Suspends what nature gave me at my birth, 85
 My shaping spirit of Imagination.
 For not to think of what I needs must feel,
 But to be still and patient, all I can ;
 And haply by abstruse research to steal
 From my own nature all the natural man— 90
 This was my sole resource, my only plan :
 Till that which suits a part infects the whole,
 And now is almost grown the habit of my soul.

VII

Hence, viper thoughts, that coil around my mind,
 Reality's dark dream ! 95
 I turn from you, and listen to the wind,
 Which long has raved unnoticed. What a scream
 Of agony by torture lengthened out
 That lute sent forth ! Thou Wind, that rav'st without,
 Bare crag, or mountain-tairn, or blasted tree, 100
 Or pine-grove whither woodman never clomb,
 Or lonely house, long held the witches' home,
 Methinks were fitter instruments for thee,
 Mad Lutanist ! who in this month of showers,
 Of dark-brown gardens, and of peeping flowers, 105
 Mak'st Devils' yule, with worse than wintry song,
 The blossoms, buds, and timorous leaves among.

Thou Actor, perfect in all tragic sounds !
 Thou mighty Poet, c'en to frenzy bold !

What tell'st thou now about ? 110

'Tis of the rushing of an host in rout,
 With groans, of trampled men, with smarting wounds—
 At once they groan with pain, and shudder with the cold !
 But hush ! there is a pause of deepest silence !

And all that noise, as of a rushing crowd, 115
 With groans, and tremulous shudderings—all is over—

It tells another tale, with sounds less deep and loud !

A tale of less affright,
 And tempered with delight,
 As Otway's self had framed the tender lay,— 120

'Tis of a little child

Upon a lonesome wild,
 Not far from home, but she hath lost her way :
 And now moans low in bitter grief and fear,
 And now screams loud, and hopes to make her mother hear.

VIII

'Tis midnight, but small thoughts have I of sleep : 126
 Full seldom may my friend such vigils keep !

Visit her, gentle Sleep ! with wings of healing,
 And may this storm be but a mountain-birth,
 May all the stars hang bright above her dwelling, 130
 Silent as though they watched the sleeping Earth !

With light heart may she rise,
 Gay fancy, cheerful eyes,
 Joy lift her spirit, joy attune her voice ;
 To her may all things live, from pole to pole,
 Their life the eddying of her living soul ! 135

O simple spirit, guided from above,
 Dear Lady ! friend devoutest of my choice,
 Thus mayest thou ever, evermore rejoice.

Hymn before Sunrise in the Vale of Chamouni and included in Sibylline Leaves, 1817

HAST thou a charm to stay the morning-star
In his steep course? So long he seems to pause
On thy bald awful head, O sovran BLANC.
The Arve and Arveiron at thy base
Rave ceaselessly; but thou, most awful Form! 5
Risest from forth thy silent sea of pines,
How silently! Around thee and above
Deep is the air and dark, substantial, black,
An ebon mass: methinks thou piercest it,
As with a wedge! But when I look again, 10
It is thine own calm home, thy crystal shrine,
Thy habitation from eternity!
O dread and silent Mount! I gazed upon thee,
Till thou, still present to the bodily sense,
Didst vanish from my thought: entranced in prayer 15
I worshipped the Invisible alone.

Yet, like some sweet beguiling melody,
So sweet, we know not we are listening to it,
Thou, the meanwhile, wast blending with my Thought,
Yea, with my Life and Life's own secret joy: 20
Till the dilating Soul, enrapt, transfused,
Into the mighty vision passing—there
As in her natural form, swelled vast to Heaven!

Awake, my soul! not only passive praise
Thou owest! not alone these swelling tears, 25

Mute thanks and secret ecstasy ! Awake,
 Voice of sweet song ! Awake, my heart, awake !
 Green vales and icy cliffs, all join my Hymn.

Thou first and chief, sole sovereign of the Vale !
 O struggling with the darkness all the night, 30
 And visited all night by troops of stars,
 Or when they climb the sky or when they sink :
 Companion of the morning-star at dawn,
 Thyself Earth's rosy star, and of the dawn
 Co-herald : wake, O wake, and utter praise ! 35
 Who sank thy sunless pillars deep in Earth ?
 Who filled thy countenance with rosy light ?
 Who made thee parent of perpetual streams ?

And you, ye five wild torrents fiercely glad !
 Who called you forth from night and utter death, 40
 From dark and icy caverns called you forth,
 Down those precipitous, black, jagged rocks,
 For ever shattered and the same for ever ?
 Who gave you your invulnerable life,
 Your strength, your speed, your fury, and your joy, 45
 Unceasing thunder and eternal foam ?
 And who commanded (and the silence came),
 Here let the billows stiffen, and have rest ?

Ye Ice-falls ! ye that from the mountain's brow
 Adown enormous ravines slope amain— 50
 Torrents, methinks, that heard a mighty voice,
 And stopped at once amid their maddest plunge !
 Motionless torrents ! silent cataracts !
 Who made you glorious as the Gates of Heaven
 Beneath the keen full moon ? Who bade the sun 55
 Clothe you with rainbows ? Who, with living flowers
 Of loveliest blue, spread garlands at your feet ?—
 God ! let the torrents, like a shout of nations,

Answer ! and let the ice-plains echo, GOD !
 GOD ! sing ye meadow-streams with gladsome voice ! 60
 Ye pine-groves, with your soft and soul-like sounds !
 And they too have a voice, yon piles of snow,
 And in their perilous fall shall thunder, GOD !

Ye living flowers that skirt the eternal frost !
 Ye wild goats sporting round the eagle's nest ! 65
 Ye eagles, play-mates of the mountain-storm !
 Ye lightnings, the dread arrows of the clouds !
 Ye signs and wonders of the element !
 Utter forth GOD, and fill the hills with praise !

Thou too, hoar Mount ! with thy sky-pointing peaks,
 Oft from whose feet the avalanche, unheard, 71
 Shoots downward, glittering through the pure serene
 Into the depth of clouds, that veil thy breast—
 Thou too again, stupendous Mountain ! thou
 That as I raise my head, awhile bowed low 75
 In adoration, upward from thy base
 Slow travelling with dim eyes suffused with tears,
 Solemnly seemest, like a vapoury cloud,
 To rise before me—Rise, O ever rise,
 Rise like a cloud of incense from the Earth ! 80
 Thou kingly Spirit throned among the hills,
 Thou dread ambassador from Earth to Heaven,
 Great Hierarch ! tell thou the silent sky,
 And tell the stars, and tell yon rising sun
 Earth, with her thousand voices, praises GOD. 85

The Pains of Sleep

Composed 1803.—Published with Christabel, 1816

ERE on my bed my limbs I lay,
 It hath not been my use to pray
 With moving lips or bended knees ;
 But silently, by slow degrees,
 My spirit I to Love compose, 5
 In humble trust mine eye-lids close,
 With reverential resignation,
 No wish conceived, no thought exprest,
 Only a sense of supplication ;
 A sense o'er all my soul imprest 10
 That I am weak, yet not unblest,
 Since in me, round me, every where Eternal Strength and Wisdom are,

 But yester-night I prayed aloud
 In anguish and in agony, 15
 Up-starting from the fiendish crowd
 Of shapes and thoughts that tortured me :
 A lurid light, a trampling throng,
 Sense of intolerable wrong,
 And whom I scorned, those only strong ! 20
 Thirst of revenge, the powerless will Still baffled, and yet burning still !
 Desire with loathing strangely mixed
 On wild or hateful objects fixed.
 Fantastic passions ! maddening brawl ! 25
 And shame and terror over all !
 Deeds to be hid which were not hid,
 Which all confused I could not know
 Whether I suffered, or I did :
 For all seemed guilt, remorse or woe, 30

My own or others still the same
Life-stifling fear, soul-stifling shame.

So two nights passed : the night's dismay
Saddened and stunned the coming day.
Sleep, the wide blessing, seemed to me 35
Distemper's worst calamity.

The third night, when my own loud scream
Had waked me from the fiendish dream,
O'ercome with sufferings strange and wild,
I wept as I had been a child ; 40

And having thus by tears subdued
My anguish to a milder mood,
Such punishments, I said, were due
To natures deepliest stained with sin,—
For aye entempesting anew 45

The unfathomable hell within,
The horror of their deeds to view,
To know and loathe, yet wish and do !
Such griefs with such men well agree,
But wherefore, wherefore fall on me ? 50

To be beloved is all I need,
And whom I love, I love indeed.

To William Wordsworth

On the Growth of an Individual Mind

Composed January 1807.—Published in Sibylline Leaves, 1817

FRIEND of the wise ! and Teacher of the Good !
 Into my heart have I received that Lay
 More than historic, that prophetic Lay
 Wherein (high theme by thee first sung aright)
 Of the foundations and the building up 5
 Of a Human Spirit thou hast dared to tell
 What may be told, to the understanding mind
 Revealeable ; and what within the mind
 By vital breathings secret as the soul
 Of vernal growth, oft quickens in the heart 10
 Thoughts all too deep for words !—

Theme hard as high !

Of smiles spontaneous, and mysterious fears
 (The first-born they of Reason and twin-birth),
 Of tides obedient to external force,
 And currents self-determined, as might seem, 15
 Or by some inner Power ; of moments awful,
 Now in thy inner life, and now abroad,
 When power streamed from thee, and thy soul received
 The light reflected, as a light bestowed—
 Of fancies fair, and milder hours of youth, 20
 Hyblean murmurs of poetic thought
 Industrious in its joy, in vales and glens
 Native or outland, lakes and famous hills !
 Or on the lonely high-road, when the stars
 Were rising ; or by secret mountain-streams, 25
 The guides and the companions of thy way !

Of more than Fancy, of the Social Sense
 Distending wide, and man beloved as man,
 Where France in all her towns lay vibrating
 Like some becalmed bark beneath the burst 30
 Of Heaven's immediate thunder, when no cloud
 Is visible, or shadow on the main.
 For thou wert there, thine own brows garlanded,
 Amid the tremor of a realm aglow,
 Amid a mighty nation jubilant, 35
 When from the general heart of human kind
 Hope sprang forth like a full-born Deity !
 ——Of that dear Hope afflicted and struck down,
 So summoned homeward, thenceforth calm and sure
 From the dread watch-tower of man's absolute self, 40
 With light unwaning on her eyes, to look
 Far on——herself a glory to behold,
 The Angel of the vision ! Then (last strain)
 Of Duty, chosen Laws controlling choice,
 Action and joy !—An Orphic song indeed, 45
 A song divine of high and passionate thoughts
 To their own music chaunted !

O great Bard !

Ere yet that last strain dying awed the air,
 With steadfast eye I viewed thee in the choir
 Of ever-enduring men. The truly great 50
 Have all one age, and from one visible space
 Shed influence ! They, both in power and act,
 Are permanent, and Time is not with them,
 Save as it worketh for them, they in it.
 Nor less a sacred Roll, than those of old, 55
 And to be placed, as they, with gradual fame
 Among the archives of mankind, thy work
 Makes audible a linked lay of Truth.
 Of Truth profound a sweet continuous lay,

Not learnt, but native, her own natural notes ! 60
 Ah ! as I listened with a heart forlorn,
 The pulses of my being beat anew :
 And even as Life returns upon the drowned,
 Life's joy rekindling roused a throng of pains—
 Keen pangs of Love, awakening as a babe 65
 Turbulent, with an outcry in the heart ;
 And fears self-willed, that shunned the eye of Hope ;
 And Hope that scarce would know itself from Fear ;
 Sense of past Youth, and Manhood come in vain,
 And Genius given, and Knowledge won in vain ; 70
 And all which I had culled in wood-walks wild,
 And all which patient toil had reared, and all,
 Commune with thee had opened out—but flowers
 Strewed on my corse, and borne upon my bier
 In the same coffin, for the self-same grave ! 75

That way no more ! and ill beseems it me,
 Who came a welcomer in herald's guise,
 Singing of Glory, and Futurity,
 To wander back on such unhealthful road,
 Plucking the poisons of self-harm ! And ill 80
 Such intertwine beseems triumphal wreaths Strew'd before thy advancing !

Nor do thou,
 Sage Bard ! impair the memory of that hour
 Of thy communion with my nobler mind
 By pity or grief, already felt too long ! 85
 Nor let my words import more blame than needs.
 The tumult rose and ceased : for Peace is nigh
 Where Wisdom's voice has found a listening heart.
 Amid the howl of more than wintry storms,
 The Halcyon hears the voice of vernal hours 90
 Already on the wing.

Eve following eve,

Dear tranquil time, when the sweet sense of Home
Is sweetest ! moments for their own sake hailed
And more desired, more precious, for thy song,
In silence listening, like a devout child, 95
My soul lay passive, by thy various strain
Driven as in surges now beneath the stars,
With momentary stars of my own birth,
Fair constellated foam, still darting off
Into the darkness ; now a tranquil sea, 100
Outspread and bright, yet swelling to the moon.

And when—O Friend ! my comforter and guide !
Strong in thyself, and powerful to give strength !—
Thy long sustained Song finally closed,
And thy deep voice had ceased—yet thou thyself 105
Wert still before my eyes, and round us both
That happy vision of beloved faces—
Scarce conscious, and yet conscious of its close
I sate, my being blended in one thought
(Thought was it ? or aspiration ? or resolve ?) 110
Absorbed, yet hanging still upon the sound—
And when I rose, I found myself in prayer.

'Tis true, Idoloclastes Satyrane !
(So call him, for so mingling blame with praise,
And smiles with anxious looks, his earliest friends,
Masking his birth-name, wont to character
His wild-wood fancy and impetuous zeal) : 5
'Tis true that, passionate for ancient truths,
And honouring with religious love the Great

Of elder times, he hated to excess,
 With an unquiet and intolerant scorn,
 The hollow Puppets of a hollow Age, 10
 Ever idolatrous, and changing ever
 Its worthless Idols ! Learning, Power, and Time, (Too much of all) thus wasting in vain war
 Of fervid colloquy. Sickness, 'tis true,
 Whole years of weary days, besieged him close, 15
 Even to the gates and inlets of his life !
 But it is true, no less, that strenuous, firm,
 And with a natural gladness, he maintained
 The citadel unconquered, and in joy
 Was strong to follow the delightful Muse. 20
 For not a hidden path, that to the shades
 Of the beloved Parnassian forest leads,
 Lurked undiscovered by him ; not a rill
 There issues from the fount of Hippocrene,
 But he had traced it upward to its source, 25
 Through open glade, dark glen, and secret dell,
 Knew the gay wild flowers on its banks, and culled
 Its med'cinable herbs. Yea, oft alone,
 Piercing the long-neglected holy cave,
 The haunt obscure of old Philosophy, 30
 He had with lifted torch its starry walls
 Sparkle, as erst they sparkled to the flame
 Of odorous lamps tended by Saint and Sage.
 O framed for calmer times and nobler hearts !
 O studious Poet, eloquent for truth ! 35
 Philosopher ! contemning wealth and death,
 Yet docile, childlike, full of Life and Love !
 Here, rather than on monumental stone,
 This record of thy worth thy Friend inscribes,
 Thoughtful, with quiet tears upon his cheek. 40

A SUNNY shaft did I behold,
 From sky to earth it slanted :
 And poised therein a bird so bold—
 Sweet bird, thou wert enchanted !
 He sank, he rose, he twinkled, he trolled 5
 Within that shaft of sunny mist ;
 His eyes of fire, his beak of gold,
 All else of amethyst !
 And thus he sang : ‘ Adieu ! adieu !
 Love’s dreams prove seldom true. 10
 The blossoms they make no delay :
 The sparkling dew-drops will not stay.
 Sweet month of May,
 We must away ;
 Far, far away ! 15
 To-day ! to-day !

WHERE is the grave of Sir Arthur O’Kellyn ?
 Where may the grave of that good man be ?—
 By the side of a spring, on the breast of Helvellyn,
 Under the twigs of a young birch tree !
 The oak that in summer was sweet to hear, 5
 And rustled its leaves in the fall of the year,
 And whistled and roared in the winter alone,
 Is gone,—and the birch in its stead is grown.—
 The Knight’s bones are dust,
 And his good sword rust ;— 10
 His soul is with the saints I trust.

It may indeed be phantasy, when I
 Essay to draw from all created things
 Deep, heartfelt, inward joy that closely clings ;
 And trace in leaves and flowers that round me lie
 Lessons of love and earnest piety. 5
 So let it be ; and if the wide world rings
 In mock of this belief, it brings
 Nor fear, nor grief, nor vain perplexity.
 So will I build my altar in the fields,
 And the blue sky my fretted dome shall be, 10
 And the sweet fragrance that the wild flower yields
 Shall be the incense I will yield to Thee,
 Thee only God ! and thou shalt not despise
 Even me, the priest of this poor sacrifice.

VERSE, a breeze mid blossoms straying,
 Where Hope clung feeding, like a bee—
 Both were mine ! Life went a-maying
 With Nature, Hope, and Poesy,
 When I was young ! 5
 When I was young ?—Ah, woful When !
 Ah ! for the change 'twixt Now and Then !
 This breathing house not built with hands,
 This body that does me grievous wrong,
 O'er acry cliffs and glittering sands, 10
 How lightly then it flashed along :—

Like those trim skiffs, unknown of yore,
 On winding lakes and rivers wide,
 That ask no aid of sail or oar,
 That fear no spite of wind or tide ! 15
 Nought cared this body for wind or weather
 When Youth and I lived in't together.

Flowers are lovely ; Love is flower-like ;
 Friendship is a sheltering tree ;
 O ! the joys, that came down shower-like, 20
 Of Friendship, Love, and Liberty,
 Ere I was old !

Ere I was old ? Ah woful Ere,
 Which tells me, Youth 's no longer here !
 O Youth ! for years so many and sweet, 25
 'Tis known, that Thou and I were one,
 I'll think it but a fond conceit—
 It cannot be that Thou art gone !
 Thy vesper-bell hath not yet toll'd :--
 And thou wert aye a masker bold ! 30
 What strange disguise hast now put on,
 To make believe, that thou art gone ?
 I see these locks in silvery slips,
 This drooping gait, this altered size :
 But Spring-tide blossoms on thy lips, 35
 And tears take sunshine from thine eyes !
 Life is but thought : so think I will
 That Youth and I are house-mates still.

Dew-drops are the gems of morning,
 But the tears of mournful eve ! 40
 Where no hope is, life 's a warning
 That only serves to make us grieve,
 When we are old :

That only serves to make us grieve
 With oft and tedious taking-leave, 45
 Like some poor nigh-related guest,
 That may not rudely be dismiss ;
 Yet hath outstay'd his welcome while,
 And tells the jest without the smile.

Work without Hope

Lines composed 21st February 1825

Published in The Bijou, 1828 ; included in Poetical Works, 1828

ALL Nature seems at work. Slugs leave their lair—
 The bees are stirring—birds are on the wing—
 And Winter slumbering in the open air,
 Wears on his smiling face a dream of Spring !
 And I the while, the sole unbusy thing, 5
 Nor honey make, nor pair, nor build, nor sing.

Yet well I ken the banks where amaranths blow,
 Have traced the fount whence streams of nectar flow.
 Bloom, O ye amaranths ! bloom for whom ye may,
 For me ye bloom not ! Glide, rich streams, away ! 10
 With lips unbrightened, wreathless brow, I stroll :
 And would you learn the spells that drowse my soul ?
 Work without Hope draws nectar in a sieve,
 And Hope without an object cannot live.

The Garden of Boccaccio

Published in The Keepsake, 1829 ; included in Poetical Works, 1829

OF late, in one of those most weary hours,
When life seems emptied of all genial powers,
A dreary mood, which he who ne'er has known
May bless his happy lot, I sate alone ;
And, from the numbing spell to win relief, 5
Call'd on the Past for thought of glee or grief.
In vain ! bereft alike of grief and glee,
I sate and cow'r'd o'er my own vacancy !
And as I watch'd the dull continuous ache,
Which, all else slumb'ring, seem'd alone to wake ; 10
O Friend ! long wont to notice yet conceal,
And soothe by silence what words cannot heal,
I but half saw that quiet hand of thine
Place on my desk this exquisite design,
Boccaccio's Garden and its faery, 15
The love, the joyaunce, and the gallantry !
An Idyll, with Boccaccio's spirit warm,
Framed in the silent poesy of form.

Like flocks adown a newly-bathéd steep
Emerging from a mist : or like a stream 20
Of music soft that not dispels the sleep,
But casts in happier moulds the slumberer's dream,
Gazed by an idle eye with silent might
The picture stole upon my inward sight.
A tremulous warmth crept gradual o'er my chest, 25
As though an infant's finger touch'd my breast.
And one by one (I know not whence) were brought
All spirits of power that most had stirr'd my thought

In selfless boyhood, on a new world tost
 Of wonder, and in its own fancies lost ; 30
 Or charm'd my youth, that, kindled from above,
 Loved ere it loved, and sought a form for love ;
 Or lent a lustre to the earnest scan
 Of manhood, musing what and whence is man !
 Wild strain of Scalds, that in the sea-worn caves 35
 Rehearsed their war-spell to the winds and waves ;
 Or fateful hymn of those prophetic maids,
 That call'd on Hertha in deep forest glades ;
 Or minstrel lay, that cheer'd the baron's feast ;
 Or rhyme of city pomp, of monk and priest, 40
 Judge, mayor, and many a guild in long array,
 To high-church pacing on the great saint's day :
 And many a verse which to myself I sang,
 That woke the tear, yet stole away the pang
 Of hopes, which in lamenting I renew'd : 45
 And last, a matron now, of sober mien,
 Yet radiant still and with no earthly sheen,
 Whom as a faery child my childhood woo'd
 Even in my dawn of thought--Philosophy ;
 Though then unconscious of herself, pardie, 50
 She bore no other name than Poesy ;
 And, like a gift from heaven, in life's glee,
 That had but newly left a mother's knee,
 Prattled and play'd with bird and flower, and stone,
 As if with elfin playfellows well known, 55
 And life reveal'd to innocence alone.

Thanks, gentle artist ! now I can descry
 Thy fair creation with a mastering eye,
 And all awake ! And now in fix'd gaze stand,
 Now wander through the Eden of thy hand ; 60
 Praise the green arches, on the fountain clear
 See fragment shadows of the crossing deer ;

And with that serviceable nymph I stoop,
 The crystal, from its restless pool, to scoop.
 I see no longer ! I myself am there, 65
 Sit on the ground-sward, and the banquet share.
 'Tis I, that sweep that lute's love-echoing strings,
 And gaze upon the maid who gazing sings :
 Or pause and listen to the tinkling bells
 From the high tower, and think that there she dwells. 70
 With old Boccaccio's soul I stand possest,
 And breathe an air like life, that swells my chest.
 The brightness of the world, O thou once free,
 And always fair, rare land of courtesy !
 O Florence ! with the Tuscan fields and hills 75
 And famous Arno, fed with all their rills ;
 Thou brightest star of star-bright Italy !
 Rich, ornate, populous,--all treasures thine,
 The golden corn, the olive, and the vine,
 Fair cities, gallant mansions, castles old, 80
 And forests, where beside his leafy hold
 The sullen boar hath heard the distant horn,
 And whets his tusks against the gnarléd thorn ;
 Palladian palace with its storied halls ;
 Fountains, where Love lies listening to their falls ; 85
 Gardens, where flings the bridge its airy span,
 And Nature makes her happy home with man ;
 Where many a gorgeous flower is duly fed
 With its own rill, on its own spangled bed,
 And wreathes the marble urn, or leans its head, 90
 A mimic mourner, that with veil withdrawn
 Weeps liquid gems, the presents of the dawn ;—
 Thine all delights, and every muse is thine ;
 And more than all, the embrace and intertwine
 Of all with all in gay and twinkling dance ! 95
 Mid gods of Greece and warriors of romance,

See ! Boccace sits, unfolding on his knees
 The new-found roll of old Maconides ;
 But from his mantle's fold, and near the heart,
 Peers Ovid's Holy Book of Love's sweet smart ! 100

O all-enjoying and all-blending sage,
 Long be it mine to con thy mazy page,
 Where, half conceal'd, the eye of fancy views
 Fauns, nymphs, and wing'd saints, all gracious to thy muse !

Still in thy garden let me watch their pranks, 105
 And see in Dian's vest between the ranks
 Of the trim vines, some maid that half believes
 The vestal fires, of which her lover grieves,
 With that sly satyr peeping through the leaves !

Epitaph

Composed 1833.—Published in Poetical Works, 1834

STOP, Christian passer-by !—Stop, child of God,
 And read with gentle breast. Beneath this sod
 A poet lies, or that which once seem'd he.
 O, lift one thought in prayer for S. T. C. ;
 That he who many a year with toil of breath 5
 Found death in life, may here find life in death !
 Mercy for praise—to be forgiven for fame
 He ask'd, and hoped, through Christ. Do thou the same !

ROBESPIERRE

From Conciones ad Populum, 1795

THE Girondists, who were the first republicans in power, were men of enlarged views and great literary attainments ; but they seem to have been deficient in that vigour and daring activity, which circumstances made necessary. Men of genius are rarely either prompt in action or consistent in general conduct : their early habits have been those of contemplative indolence ; and the daydreams, with which they have been accustomed to amuse their solitude, adapt them for splendid speculation, not temperate and practical counsels. Brissot, the leader of the Gironde 10 party, is entitled to the character of a virtuous man, and an eloquent speaker ; and his excellences equally with his faults rendered him unfit for the helm, in the stormy hour of Revolution. Robespierre, who displaced him, possessed a glowing ardor that still remembered the end, and a cool ferocity that never either overlooked, or scrupled, the means. What the end was, is not known : that it was a wicked one, has by no means been proved. I rather think, that the distant prospect, to which he was travelling, appeared to him grand and beautiful ; but that he fixed 20 his eye on it with such intense earnestness as to neglect the foulness of the road. If however his first intentions were pure, his subsequent enormities yield a melancholy proof, that it is not the character of the possessor which directs the power, but the power which shapes and depraves the character of the possessor. In Robespierre, its influence was assisted by the properties of his disposition.—Enthusiasm, even in the gentlest temper, will frequently generate sensations of an unkindly order. If we clearly perceive any one thing to be of vast and infinite importance to 30 ourselves and all mankind, our first feelings impel us to turn with angry contempt from those, who doubt and oppose it. The ardor of undisciplined benevolence seduces us into malignity : and whenever our hearts are warm, and our objects great and excellent, intolerance is the sin that does most easily beset us. But this enthusiasm in Robespierre was blended with gloom, and suspiciousness, and inordinate vanity. His dark imagination was still brooding over supposed plots against freedom—to prevent tyranny he 10 became a Tyrant—and having realised the evils which he suspected, a wild and dreadful Tyrant.—Those loud-tongued adulators, the mob, overpowered the lone-whispered denunciations of conscience—he despotized in all the pomp of Patriotism, and masqueraded on the bloody stage of Revolution, a Caligula with the cap of Liberty on his head.

INTRODUCTION TO

BIOGRAPHIA LITERARIA, 1817

It has been my lot to have had my name introduced both in conversation, and in print, more frequently than I find it easy to explain, whether I consider the fewness, unim-20 portance, and limited circulation of my writings, or the retirement and distance, in which I have lived, both from the literary and political world. Most often it has been connected with some charge which I could not acknowledge, or some principle which I had never entertained. Nevertheless, had I had no other motive or incitement, the reader would not have been troubled with this exculpation. What my additional purposes were, will be seen in the following pages. It will be found, that the least of what I have written concerns myself personally. I have used the narration chiefly for the purpose of giving a continuity to the work, in part for the sake of the miscellaneous reflections suggested to me by particular events, but still more as introductory to the statement of my principles in Politics, Religion, and Philosophy, and the application of the rules, deduced from philosophical principles, to poetry and criticism. But of the objects, which I proposed to myself, it was not the least important to effect, as far as possible, a settlement of the long continued controversy concerning the true nature of poetic diction ; and at the same time to 10 define with the utmost impartiality the real poetic character of the poet, by whose writings this controversy was first kindled, and has been since fuelled and fanned.

In 1794, when I had barely passed the verge of manhood, I published a small volume of juvenile poems. They were received with a degree of favour, which, young as I was, I well knew was bestowed on them not so much for any positive merit, as because they were considered buds of hope, and promises of better works to come. The critics of that day, the most flattering, equally with the 20 severest, concurred in objecting to them obscurity, a general turgidness of diction, and a profusion of new coined double epithets. The first is the fault which a writer is the least able to detect in his own compositions : and my mind was not then sufficiently disciplined to receive the authority of others, as a substitute for my own conviction. Satisfied that the thoughts, such as they were, could not have been expressed otherwise, or at least more perspicuously, I forgot to inquire, whether the thoughts themselves did not demand a degree of attention unsuitable to the nature and objects of 30 poetry. This remark however applies chiefly, though not exclusively, to the Religious Musings. The remainder of the charge I admitted to its full extent, and not without sincere acknowledgements both to my private and public censors for their friendly admonitions. In the after editions,

I pruned the double epithets with no sparing hand, and used my best efforts to tame the swell and glitter both of thought and diction ; though in truth, these parasite plants of youthful poetry had insinuated themselves into my longer poems with such intricacy of union, that I was often obliged to omit disentangling the weed, from the fear of snapping the flower. From that period to the date of the present work I have published nothing, with my name, which could by any possibility have come before the board of anonymous
10 criticism. Even the three or four poems, printed with the works of a friend, as far as they were censured at all, were charged with the same or similar defects (though I am persuaded not with equal justice)—with an excess of ornament, in addition to strained and elaborate diction. . . . May I be permitted to add, that, even at the early period of my juvenile poems, I saw and admitted the superiority of an austerer and more natural style, with an insight not less clear, than I at present possess. My judgement was stronger than were my powers of realizing its dictates ; and the faults
20 of my language, though indeed partly owing to a wrong choice of subjects, and the desire of giving a poetic colouring to abstract and metaphysical truths, in which a new world then seemed to open upon me, did yet, in part likewise, originate in unfeigned diffidence of my own comparative talent.—During several years of my youth and early manhood, I revered those who had re-introduced the manly simplicity of the Grecian, and of our own elder poets, with such enthusiasm as made the hope seem presumptuous of writing successfully in the same style. Perhaps a similar 30 process has happened to others ; but my earliest poems were marked by an ease and simplicity, which I have studied, perhaps with inferior success, to impress on my later compositions.

* * *

I had just entered on my seventeenth year, when the sonnets of Mr. Bowles, twenty in number, and just then published in a quarto pamphlet, were first made known and presented to me, by a schoolfellow, who had quitted us for the University, and who, during the whole time that he was in our first form (or in our school language a Grecian) had been my patron and protector. I refer to Dr. Middleton, the truly learned, and every way excellent Bishop of Calcutta :

qui laudibus amplis

Ingenium celebrare meum, calamumque solebat,
Calcar agens animo validum. Non omnia terrae 10
Obruta ; vivit amor, vivit dolor ; ora negatur
Dulcia conspicerere ; at flere et meminisse relictum est.

It was a double pleasure to me, and still remains a tender recollection, that I should have received from a friend so revered the first knowledge of a poet, by whose works, year after year, I was so enthusiastically delighted and inspired. My earliest acquaintances will not have forgotten the undisciplined eagerness and impetuous zeal, with which I laboured to make proselytes, not only of my companions, but of all 20 with whom I conversed, of whatever rank, and in whatever place. As my school finances did not permit me to purchase copies, I made, within less than a year and an half, more than forty transcriptions, as the best presents I could offer to those, who had in any way won my regard. And with almost equal delight did I receive the three or four following publications of the same author.

Though I have seen and known enough of mankind to be well aware, that I shall perhaps stand alone in my creed, and that it will be well, if I subject myself to no worse 30 charge than that of singularity ; I am not therefore deterred from avowing, that I regard, and ever have regarded the obligations of intellect among the most sacred of the claims of gratitude. A valuable thought, or a particular train of thoughts, gives me additional pleasure, when I can safely refer and attribute it to the conversation or correspondence of another. My obligations to Mr. Bowles were indeed important, and for radical good. At a very premature age, even before my fifteenth year, I had bewildered myself in metaphysics, and in theological controversy. Nothing else pleased me. History, and particular facts, lost all interest in my mind. Poetry—(though for a schoolboy of that age, I was above par in English versification, and had already produced two or three compositions which, I may venture to 10 say, without reference to my age, were somewhat above mediocrity, and which had gained me more credit than the sound good sense of my old master was at all pleased with)—poetry itself, yea, novels and romances, became insipid to me. In my friendless wanderings on our leave-days (for I was an orphan, and had scarcely any connexions in London) highly was I delighted, if any passenger, especially if he were dressed in black, would enter into conversation with me. For I soon found the means of directing it to my favourite subjects

- 20 Of providence, fore-knowledge, will, and fate,
 Fixed fate, free will, fore-knowledge absolute,
 And found no end in wandering mazes lost.

This preposterous pursuit was, beyond doubt, injurious both to my natural powers, and to the progress of my education. It would perhaps have been destructive, had it been continued ; but from this I was auspiciously withdrawn, partly indeed by an accidental introduction to an amiable family, chiefly however, by the genial influence of a style of poetry, so tender and yet so manly, so natural and real, and yet 30 so dignified and harmonious, as the sonnets and other early poems* of Mr. Bowles. Well would it have been for me, perhaps, had I never relapsed into the same mental disease ; if I had continued to pluck the flower and reap the harvest from the cultivated surface, instead of delving in the unwholesome quicksilver mines of metaphysic lore. And if in after time I have sought a refuge from bodily pain and mismanaged sensibility in abstruse researches, which exercised the strength and subtilty of the understanding without awakening the feelings of the heart ; still there was a long and blessed interval, during which my natural faculties were allowed to expand, and my original tendencies to develop themselves—my fancy, and the love of nature, and the sense of beauty in forms and sounds.

The second advantage, which I owe to my early perusal, and admiration of these poems (to which let me add, ¹⁰ though known to me at a somewhat later period, the Lewesdon Hill of Mr. Crowe) bears more immediately on my present subject. Among those with whom I conversed, there were, of course, very many who had formed their taste, and their notions of poetry, from the writings of Pope and his followers ; or to speak more generally, in that school of French poetry, condensed and invigorated by English understanding, which had predominated from the last century. I was not blind to the merits of this school, yet, as from inexperience of the world, and consequent want of ²⁰ sympathy with the general subjects of these poems, they gave me little pleasure, I doubtless undervalued the kind, and with the presumption of youth withheld from its masters the legitimate name of poets. I saw that the excellence of this kind consisted in just and acute observations on men and manners in an artificial state of society, as its matter and substance ; and in the logic of wit, conveyed in smooth and strong epigrammatic couplets, as its form : that even when the subject was addressed to the fancy, or the intellect, as in the Rape of the Lock, or the Essay on Man ; ³⁰ nay, when it was a consecutive narration, as in that astonishing product of matchless talent and ingenuity Pope's Translation of the Iliad ; still a point was looked for at the end of each second line, and the whole was, as it were, a sortes, or,* if I may exchange a logical for a grammatical metaphor, a conjunction disjunctive, of epigrams. Meantime the matter and diction seemed to me characterized not so much by poetic thoughts, as by thoughts translated into the language of poetry. On this last point, I had occasion to render my own thoughts gradually more and more plain to myself, by frequent amicable disputes concerning Darwin's Botanic Garden, which, for some years, was greatly extolled, not only by the reading public in general, but even by those, whose genius and natural robustness of 10 understanding enabled them afterwards to act foremost in dissipating these 'painted mists' that occasionally rise from the marshes at the foot of Parnassus.

One great distinction, I appeared to myself to see plainly between even the characteristic faults of our elder poets, and the false beauty of the moderns. In the former, from Donne to Cowley, we find the most fantastic out-of-the-way thoughts, but in the most pure and genuine mother English, in the latter the most obvious thoughts, in language the most fantastic and arbitrary. Our faulty elder poets 20 sacrificed the passion and passionate flow of poetry to the subtleties of intellect and to the starts of wit; the moderns to the glare and glitter of a perpetual, yet broken and heterogeneous imagery, or rather to an amphibious something, made up, half of image, and half of abstract meaning. The one sacrificed the heart to the head; the other both heart and head to point and drapery.

THE NATURE OF POETRY

From Biographia Literaria, chap. xiv

WHAT is poetry?—is so nearly the same question with, what is a poet?—that the answer to the one is involved in the solution of the other. For it is a distinction resulting from the poetic genius itself, which sustains and modifies the images, thoughts, and emotions of the poet's own mind.

The poet, described in ideal perfection, brings the whole soul of man into activity, with the subordination of its faculties to each other according to their relative worth and dignity. He diffuses a tone and spirit of unity, that blends, and (as it were) fuses, each into each, by that synthetic and magical power, to which I would exclusively appropriate the name of Imagination. This power, first put in action by the will and understanding, and retained under their irremissive, though gentle and unnoticed, control, laxis effertur habenis, reveals itself in the balance or reconciliation of opposite or discordant qualities : of sameness, with difference ; of the general with the concrete ; the idea with the image ; the individual with the representative : the sense of novelty and freshness with old and familiar objects ; a more than usual state of emotion with more than usual order ; judgement ever awake and steady self-possession with enthusiasm and feeling profound or vehement ; and while it blends and harmonizes the natural and the artificial, still subordinates art to nature ; the manner to the matter ; and our admiration of the poet to our sympathy with the poetry. Doubtless, as Sir John Davies observes of the soul—(and his words may with slight alteration be applied, and even more appropriately, to the poetic Imagination)—

Doubtless this could not be, but that she turns
 Bodies to spirit by sublimation strange,
 As fire converts to fire the things it burns,
 As we our food into our nature change.

From their gross matter she abstracts their forms,
 And draws a kind of quintessence from things ;
 Which to her proper nature she transforms
 To bear them light on her celestial wings.

Thus does she, when from individual states
 She doth abstract the universal kinds ;
Which then re-clothed in divers names and fates
Steal access through the senses to our minds.

Finally, Good Sense is the Body of poetic genius, Fancy 10 its Drapery, Motion its Life, and Imagination the Soul that is everywhere, and in each ; and forms all into one graceful and intelligent whole.

THE PROVINCE OF CRITICISM

From Biographia Literaria, chap. xxi

I MOST willingly admit, and estimate at a high value, the services which the Edinburgh Review, and others formed afterwards on the same plan, have rendered to society in the diffusion of knowledge. I think the commencement of the Edinburgh Review an important epoch in periodical criticism ; and that it has a claim upon the gratitude of the literary republic, and indeed of the reading public at large, 20 for having originated the scheme of reviewing those books only, which are susceptible and deserving of argumentative criticism. Not less meritorious, and far more faithfully and in general far more ably executed, is their plan of supplying the vacant place of the trash or mediocrity, wisely left to sink into oblivion by its own weight, with original essays on the most interesting subjects of the time, religious, or political ;
 in which the titles of the books or pamphlets prefixed furnish only the name and occasion of the disquisition. I do not arraign the keenness, or asperity of its damnatory style, in 30 and for itself, as long as the author is addressed or treated as the mere impersonation of the work then under trial. I have no quarrel with them on this account, as long as no personal allusions are admitted, and no re-commitment (for new trial) of juvenile performances, that were published, perhaps forgotten, many years before the commencement of the review : since for the forcing back of such works to public notice no motives are easily assignable, but such as are furnished to the critic by his own personal malignity ; or what is still worse, by a habit of malignity in the form of mere wantonness.

No private grudge they need, no personal spite : 10
 The viva sectio is its own delight !
 All enmity, all envy. they disclaim,
 Disinterested thieves of our good name .
 Cool, sober murderers of their neighbour's fame !
S. T. C.

Every censure, every sarcasm respecting a publication which the critic, with the criticized work before him, can make good, is the critic's right. The writer is authorized to reply, but not to complain. Neither can any one prescribe to the critic, how soft or how hard ; how friendly, or how 20 bitter, shall be the phrases which he is to select for the expression of such reprehension or ridicule. The critic must know, what effect it is his object to produce ; and with a view to this effect must he weigh his words. But as soon as the critic betrays, that he knows more of his author, than the author's publications could have told him ; as soon as from this more intimate knowledge, elsewhere obtained, he avails himself of the slightest trait against the author ; his censure instantly becomes personal injury, his sarcasms personal insults. He ceases to be a critic, and takes on him 30 the most contemptible character to which a rational creature can be degraded, that of a gossip, backbiter, and pasquillant : but with this heavy aggravation, that he steals the unquiet, the deforming passions of the world into the museum ; into the very place which, next to the chapel and oratory, should be our sanctuary, and secure place of refuge; offers abominations on the altar of the Muses; and makes its sacred paling the very circle in which he conjures up the lying and profane spirit.

This determination of unlicensed personality, and of permitted and legitimate censure (which I owe in part to the illustrious Lessing, himself a model of acute, spirited, sometimes stinging, but always argumentative and honourable, criticism) is beyond controversy the true one: and 10 though I would not myself exercise all the rights of the latter, yet, let but the former be excluded, I submit myself to its exercise in the hands of others, without complaint and without resentment.

BIOGRAPHY

From The Friend

The history of times representeth the magnitude of actions and the public faces or deportment of persons, and passeth over in silence the smaller passages and motions of men and matters. But such being the workmanship of God, that he doth hang the greatest weight upon the smallest wires, maxima e minimis suspendens; it comes therefore to pass, that histories do rather set forth the pomp of business than the true and inward resorts thereof. But lives, if they be well written, propounding to themselves a person to represent in whom actions both greater and smaller, public and private, have a commixture, must of necessity contain a more true, native, and lively representation.—LORD BACON.

MANKIND in general are so little in the habit of looking steadily at their own meaning, or of weighing the words by which they express it, that the writer, who is careful to do both, will sometimes mislead his readers through the very excellence which qualifies him to be their instructor; and this with no other fault on his part than the modest mistake 20 of supposing in those, to whom he addresses himself, an intellect as watchful as his own. The inattentive reader adopts as unconditionally true, or perhaps rails at his author for having stated as such, what upon examination would be found to have been duly limited, and would so have been understood, if opaque spots and false refractions were as rare in the mental as in the bodily eye. The motto, for instance, to this paper has more than once served as an excuse and authority for huge volumes of biographical minutiae, which render the real character almost invisible, like clouds of dust on a portrait, or the counterfeit frankincense which smoke-blacks the favourite idol of a Catholic village. Yet Lord Bacon, by the words which I have 10 marked in italics, evidently confines the biographer to such facts as are either susceptible of some useful general inference, or tend to illustrate those qualities which distinguished the subject of them from ordinary men ; while the passage in general was meant to guard the historian against considering as trifles, all that might appear so to those who recognize no greatness in the mind, and can conceive no dignity in any incident which does not act on their senses by its external accompaniments, or on their curiosity by its immediate consequences. Things apparently in- 20 significant are recommended to our notice, not for their own sakes, but for their bearings or influences on things of importance ; in other words, when they are insignificant in appearance only.

An inquisitiveness into the minutest circumstances, and casual sayings of eminent contemporaries, is indeed quite natural ; but so are all our follies, and the more natural they are, the more caution should we exert in guarding against them. To scribble trifles even on the perishable glass of an inn window, is the mark of an idler ; but to 30 engrave them on the marble monument, sacred to the memory of the departed great, is something worse than idleness. The spirit of genuine biography is in nothing more conspicuous than in the firmness with which it withstands the cravings of worthless curiosity, as distinguished from the thirst after useful knowledge. For, in the first place, such anecdotes as derive their whole and sole interest from the great name of the person concerning whom they are related, and neither illustrate his general character nor his particular actions, would scarcely have been noticed or remembered except by men of weak minds: it is not unlikely, therefore, that they were misapprehended at the time, and it is most probable that they have been related as incorrectly as they were noticed injudiciously. Nor are 10 the consequences of such garrulous biography merely negative. For as insignificant stories can derive no real respectability from the eminence of the person who happens to be the subject of them, but rather an additional deformity of disproportion, they are apt to have their insipidity seasoned by the same bad passions that accompany the habit of gossiping in general; and the misapprehensions of weak men meeting with the misinterpretations of malignant men, have not seldom formed the groundwork of the most grievous calumnies. In the second place, these 20 trifles are subversive of the great end of biography, which is to fix the attention, and to interest the feelings, of men on those qualities and actions which have made a particular life worthy of being recorded. It is, no doubt, the duty of an honest biographer, to portray the prominent imperfections as well as excellences of his hero; but I am at a loss to conceive how this can be deemed an excuse for heaping together a multitude of particulars, which can prove nothing of any man that might not have been safely taken for granted of all men. In the present age (emphatically the 30 age of personality!) there are more than ordinary motives for withholding all encouragement from this mania of busying ourselves with the names of others, which is still more alarming as a symptom than it is troublesome as a disease. The reader must be still less acquainted with contemporary literature than myself—a case not likely to occur—if he needs me to inform him, that there are men, who trading in the silliest anecdotes, in unprovoked abuse and senseless eulogy, think themselves nevertheless employed both worthily and honourably, if only all this be done ‘in good set terms’, and from the press, and of public characters; a class which has increased so rapidly of late, that it becomes difficult to discover what characters are to be considered as private. Alas! if these wretched misusers of language, and the means of giving wings to thought—the means of multiplying the presence of an individual mind, had ever known how great a thing the possession of any one simple truth is, and how mean a thing a mere fact is, except as seen in the light of some comprehensive truth; if they had but once experienced the unborrowed complacency, the inward independence, the home-bred strength, with which every clear conception of the reason is accompanied; they would shrink from their own pages as at the remembrance of a crime. For a crime it is (and the man who hesitates in pronouncing it such, must be ignorant of what mankind owe to books, what he himself owes to them in spite of his ignorance), thus to introduce the spirit of vulgar scandal and personal inquietude into the closet and the library, environing with evil passions the very sanctuaries, to which we should flee for refuge from them! For to what do these publications appeal, whether they present themselves as biography or as anonymous criticism, but to the same feelings which the scandal-bearers and time-killers of ordinary life seek to gratify in themselves and their listeners? And both the authors and admirers of such publications, in what respect are they less truants and deserters from their own hearts, and from their appointed task of understanding and amending them, than the most garrulous female chronicler of the goings-on of yesterday in the families of her neighbours and townsfolk?

SHAKESPEARE

From Lectures on Shakespeare, 1818

THUS then Shakespeare appears, from his Venus and Adonis and Rape of Lucrece alone, apart from all his great works, to have possessed all the conditions of the true poet. Let me now proceed to destroy, as far as may be in my power, the popular notion that he was a great dramatist by mere instinct, that he grew immortal in his own despite, and sank below men of second or third-rate power, when he attempted aught beside the drama—even as bees construct their cells and manufacture their honey to 10 admirable perfection ; but would in vain attempt to build a nest. Now this mode of reconciling a compelled sense of inferiority with a feeling of pride, began in a few pedants, who having read that Sophocles was the great model of tragedy, and Aristotle the infallible dictator of its rules, and finding that the Lear, Hamlet, Othello and other master-pieces were neither in imitation of Sophocles, nor in obedience to Aristotle,—and not having (with one or two exceptions) the courage to affirm, that the delight which their country received from generation to generation, in 20 defiance of the alterations of circumstances and habits, was wholly groundless,—took upon them, as a happy medium and refuge, to talk of Shakespeare as a sort of beautiful lusus naturae, a delightful monster,—wild, indeed, and without taste or judgement, but like the inspired idiots so much venerated in the East, uttering, amid the strangest follies, the sublimest truths. In nine places out of ten in which I find his awful name mentioned, it is with some epithet of ‘ wild ’, ‘ irregular ’, ‘ pure child of nature ’, &c. If all this be true, we must submit to it ;
 30 though to a thinking mind it cannot but be painful to find any excellence, merely human, thrown out of all human analogy, and thereby leaving us neither rules for imitation, nor motives to imitate ;—but if false, it is a dangerous falsehood ;—for it affords a refuge to secret self-conceit,—enables a vain man at once to escape his reader's indignation by general swoln panegyrics, and merely by his ipse dixit to treat, as contemptible, what he has not intellect enough to comprehend, or soul to feel, without assigning any reason, or referring his opinion to any demonstrative principle ;—thus leaving Shakespeare as a sort of grand Lama, adored indeed, and his very excrements 10 prized as relics, but with no authority or real influence. I grieve that every late voluminous edition of his works would enable me to substantiate the present charge with a variety of facts one-tenth of which would of themselves exhaust the time allotted to me. Every critic, who has or has not made a collection of black-letter books—in itself a useful and respectable amusement,—puts on the seven-league boots of self-opinion, and strides at once from an illustrator into a supreme judge, and blind and deaf, fills his three-ounce phial at the waters of Niagara ; and 20 determines positively the greatness of the cataract to be neither more nor less than his three-ounce phial has been able to receive.

I think this a very serious subject. It is my earnest desire—my passionate endeavour,—to enforce at various times and by various arguments and instances the close and reciprocal connexion of just taste with pure morality. Without that acquaintance with the heart of man, or that docility and childlike gladness to be made acquainted with it, which those only can have, who dare look at their 30 own hearts—and that with a steadiness which religion only has the power of reconciling with sincere humility ;—without this, and the modesty produced by it, I am deeply convinced that no man, however wide his erudition, however patient his antiquarian researches, can possibly understand, or be worthy of understanding, the writings of Shakespeare.

Assuredly that criticism of Shakespeare will alone be genial which is reverential. The Englishman, who without reverence, a proud and affectionate reverence, can utter the name of William Shakespeare, stands disqualified for the office of critic. He wants one at least of the very senses, the language of which he is to employ, and will discourse, at best, but as a blind man, while the whole
10 harmonious creation of light and shade with all its subtle interchange of deepening and dissolving colours rises in silence to the silent fiat of the uprising Apollo. However inferior in ability I may be to some who have followed me, I own I am proud that I was the first in time who publicly demonstrated to the full extent of the position, that the supposed irregularity and extravagances of Shakespeare were the mere dreams of a pedantry that arraigned the eagle because it had not the dimensions of the swan. In all the successive courses of lectures delivered by me, since 20 my first attempt at the Royal Institution, it has been, and it still remains, my object, to prove that in all points from the most important to the most minute, the judgement of Shakespeare is commensurate with his genius,—nay, that his genius reveals itself in his judgement, as in its most exalted form. And the more gladly do I recur to this subject from the clear conviction, that to judge aright, and with distinct consciousness of the grounds of our judgement, concerning the works of Shakespeare, implies the power and the means of judging rightly of all other 30 works of intellect, those of abstract science alone excepted.

It is a painful truth that not only individuals, but even whole nations, are oftentimes so enslaved to the habits of their education and immediate circumstances, as not to judge disinterestedly even on those subjects, the very pleasure arising from which consists in its disinterestedness, namely, on subjects of taste and polite literature. Instead of deciding concerning their own modes and customs by any rule of reason, nothing appears rational, becoming, or beautiful to them, but what coincides with the peculiarities of their education. In this narrow circle, individuals may attain to exquisite discrimination, as the French critics have done in their own literature; but a true critic can no more be such without placing himself on some central point, from which he may command the whole, that is, some general rule, which, founded in reason, 10 or the faculties common to all men, must therefore apply to each,—than an astronomer can explain the movements of the solar system without taking his stand in the sun. And let me remark, that this will not tend to produce despotism, but, on the contrary, true tolerance, in the critic. He will, indeed, require, as the spirit and substance of a work, something true in human nature itself, and independent of all circumstances; but in the mode of applying it, he will estimate genius and judgement according to the felicity with which the imperishable soul of 20 intellect shall have adapted itself to the age, the place, and the existing manners. The error he will expose lies in reversing this, and holding up the mere circumstances as perpetual to the utter neglect of the power which can alone animate them. For art cannot exist without, or apart from, nature; and what has man of his own to give to his fellow man, but his own thoughts and feelings, and his observations, so far as they are modified by his own thoughts or feelings?

Let me, then, once more submit this question to minds 30 emancipated alike from national, or party, or sectarian prejudice:—Are the plays of Shakespeare works of rude uncultivated genius, in which the splendour of the parts compensates, if aught can compensate, for the barbarous shapelessness and irregularity of the whole?—Or is the form equally admirable with the matter, and the judgement of the great poet not less deserving our wonder than his genius?—Or, again, to repeat the question in other words :—Is Shakespeare a great dramatic poet on account only of those beauties and excellences which he possesses in common with the ancients, but with diminished claims to our love and honour to the full extent of his differences from them?—Or are these very differences additional proofs of poetic wisdom, at once results and symbols of living power as contrasted with lifeless mechanism—of free and rival originality as contra-distinguished from servile imitation, or, more accurately, a blind copying of effects, instead of a true imitation, of the essential principles?—Imagine not that I am about to oppose genius to rules. No! the comparative value of these rules is the very cause to be tried. The spirit of poetry, like all other living powers, must of necessity circumscribe itself by rules, were it only to unite power with beauty. It must embody in order to reveal itself; but a living body is of necessity an organized one; and what is organization but the connexion of parts in and for a whole, so that each part is at once end and means?—This is no discovery of criticism;—it is a necessity of the human mind; and all nations have felt and obeyed it, in the invention of metre, and measured sounds, as the vehicle and involucrum of poetry—itself a fellow-growth from the same life,—even as the bark is to the tree!

No work of true genius dares want its appropriate form, neither indeed is there any danger of this. As it must not, so genius cannot, be lawless; for it is even this that constitutes it genius—the power of acting creatively under laws of its own origination. How then comes it that not only single Zoili, but whole nations have combined in unhesitating condemnation of our great dramatist, as a sort of African nature, rich in beautiful monsters—as a wild heath where islands of fertility look the greener from the surrounding waste, where the loveliest plants now shine out among unsightly weeds, and now are choked by their parasitic growth, so intertwined that we cannot disentangle the weed without snapping the flower?—In this statement I have had no reference to the vulgar abuse of Voltaire, save as far as his charges are coincident with the decisions of Shakespeare's own commentators and (so they would tell you) almost idolatrous admirers. The true ground of the mistake lies in the confounding mechanical 10 regularity with organic form. The form is mechanic, when on any given material we impress a pre-determined form, not necessarily arising out of the properties of the material ; —as when to a mass of wet clay we give whatever shape we wish it to retain when hardened. The organic form, on the other hand, is innate ; it shapes, as it develops, itself from within, and the fullness of its development is one and the same with the perfection of its outward form. Such as the life is, such is the form. Nature, the prime genial artist, inexhaustible in diverse powers, is equally 20 inexhaustible in forms ;—each exterior is the physiognomy of the being within,—its true image reflected and thrown out from the concave mirror ;—and even such is the appropriate excellence of her chosen poet, of our own Shakespeare,—himself a nature humanized, a genial understanding directing self-consciously a power and an implicit wisdom deeper even than our consciousness.

I greatly dislike beauties and selections in general ; but as proof positive of his unrivalled excellence, I should like to try Shakespeare by this criterion. Make out your 30 amplest catalogue of all the human faculties, as reason or the moral law, the will, the feeling of the coincidence of the two (a feeling sui generis et demonstratio demonstratio-num) called the conscience, the understanding or prudence, wit, fancy, imagination, judgement,—and then of the objects on which these are to be employed, as the beauties, the terrors, and the seeming caprices of nature, the realities and the capabilities, that is, the actual and the ideal, of the human mind, conceived as an individual or as a social being, as in innocence or in guilt, in a play-paradise, or in a war-field of temptation—and then compare with Shakespeare under each of these heads all or any of the writers in prose and verse that have ever lived ! Who, that is competent to judge, doubts the result ?—And ask your 10 own hearts, ask your own common sense— to conceive the possibility of this man being—I say not, the drunken savage of that wretched sciolist, whom Frenchmen, to their shame, have honoured before their elder and better worthies—but the anomalous, the wild, the irregular, genius of our daily criticism ! What ! are we to have miracles in sport ?—Or, I speak reverently, does God choose idiots by whom to convey divine truths to man ?

GIBBON

From Table Talk, August 15, 1833

GIBBON'S style is detestable, but his style is not the worst thing about him. His history has proved an effectual bar
 20 to all real familiarity with the temper and habits of imperial Rome. Few persons read the original authorities, even those which are classical ; and certainly no distinct knowledge of the actual state of the empire can be obtained from Gibbon's rhetorical sketches. He takes notice of nothing but what may produce an effect ; he skips on from eminence to eminence, without ever taking you through the valleys between ; in fact, his work is little else but a disguised collection of all the splendid anecdotes which he could find in any book concerning any persons or nations 30 from the Antonines to the capture of Constantinople. When I read a chapter in Gibbon, I seem to be looking through a luminous haze or fog : figures come and go, I know not how or why, all larger than life, or distorted or discoloured ; nothing is real, vivid, true ; all is scenical, and, as it were, exhibited by candlelight. And then to call it a History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire ! Was there ever a greater misnomer ? I protest I do not remember a single philosophical attempt made throughout the work to fathom the ultimate causes of the decline or fall of that empire. How miserably deficient is the narrative of the important reign of Justinian ! And that 10 poor scepticism, which Gibbon mistook for Socratic philosophy, has led him to mis-state and mistake the character and influence of Christianity in a way which even an avowed infidel or atheist would not and could not have done. Gibbon was a man of immense reading ; but he had no philosophy ; and he never fully understood the principle upon which the best of the old historians wrote. He attempted to imitate their artificial construction of the whole work—their dramatic ordonnance of the parts—without seeing that their histories were intended more as 20 documents illustrative of the truths of political philosophy than as mere chronicles of events.

The true key to the declension of the Roman empire—which is not to be found in all Gibbon's immense work—may be stated in two words : the imperial character overlaying, and finally destroying, the national character. Rome under Trajan was an empire without a nation.

GARRICK

From Thomas Allsop's Letters, Conversations, and Recollections of S. T. Coleridge, 1836

THE warmest admirers of histrionic merit would not willingly be supposed to overlook the difference, both in kind and degree, between an excellence that in its very nature is transient, (or continuing, only as an echo, in the memory of a single generation, while the name alone remains for posterity) and a power, enduring as the Soul of Man and commensurate with the human language.

But, without dreading the imputation of a wish to balance weights so unequal, we may assert that if ever
 10 two great men might seem to have been made for each other, we have this correspondency presented to us in the instance of Garrick and Shakespeare. It will be sufficient for me to direct attention to one peculiarity, the common and exclusive characteristic of both—the union of the highest Tragic and Comic Excellence in the same individual. This indeed supersedes the necessity of mentioning the particular merits which it implies and comprehends, while it is eminently and in the exactest sense of the word characteristic, inasmuch as this transcendent power sprung
 20 from the same source in both—from an insight into human nature at its fountain head, which exists in those creations of Genius alone, in which the substance and essential forms are the Gifts of Meditation and self-research, and the individualizing accidents, and the requisite drapery, are supplied by observation and acquaintance with the world. We may then hope for a second Garrick or of an approach to a Shakespeare where we find a knowledge of Man united to an equal knowledge of Men, and both co-existing with the power of giving Life and Individuality to the products of 30 both. For such a being possesses the rudiments of every character in himself, and acquires the faculty of becoming, for the moment, whatever character he may choose to represent. He combines in his own person at once the materials and the workman. The precious proofs of this rare excellence in our Greatest Dramatic Poet are in the hands of all men. To exhibit the same excellence in our greatest actor, we can conceive no more lively or impressive way than by presenting him in the two extreme Poles of his Creative and almost Protean Genius—in his Richard the Third and his Abel Drugger.

LIMITATION OF THE LOVE OF POETRY

From Literary Remains of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, 1836

A MAN may be, perhaps, exclusively a poet, a poet most exquisite in his kind, though the kind must needs be of inferior worth ; I say, may be ; for I cannot recollect any one instance in which I have a right to suppose it. But, surely, to have an exclusive pleasure in poetry, not being yourself a poet—to turn away from all effort, and to dwell wholly on the images of another's vision—is an unworthy and effeminate thing. A jeweller may devote his whole time to jewels unblamed ; but the mere amateur, who grounds his taste on no chemical or geological idea, ²⁰ cannot claim the same exemption from despect. How shall he fully enjoy Wordsworth, who has never meditated on the truths which Wordsworth has wedded to immortal verse ?

THE LOVE OF NATURE

From Anima Poetae,

THE love of Nature is ever returned double to us, not only the delighter in our delight, but by linking our sweetest, but of themselves perishable, feelings to distinct and vivid images, which we ourselves, at times, and which a thousand casual recollections, recall to our memory. She is the preserver, the treasurer of our joys. Even in sickness and nervous diseases, she has peopled our imagination with lovely forms which have sometimes overpowered the inward pain and brought with them their old sensations.

10 And even when all men have seemed to desert us and the friend of our heart has passed on, with one glance from his 'cold disliking eye'—yet even then the blue heaven spreads it out and bends over us, and the little tree still shelters us under its plumage as a second cope, a domestic firmament, and the low creeping gale will sigh in the heath-plant and soothe us by sound of sympathy till the lulled grief lose itself in fixed gaze on the purple heath-blossom, till the present beauty becomes a vision of memory.

EUTHANASIA

From Table Talk, July 10, 1834

I AM dying, but without expectation of a speedy release.

20 Is it not strange that very recently bygone images and scenes of early life have stolen into my mind, like breezes blown from the spice-islands of Youth and Hope—those twin realities of this phantom world! I do not add Love; for what is Love but Youth and Hope embracing, and so seen as one? I say realities; for reality is a thing of degrees, from the Iliad to a dream; καὶ γάρ τ' ὄναρ ἐκ Διὸς ἔσται. Yet, in a strict sense, reality is not predicable at all of aught below Heaven. ‘Es enim in coelis, Pater noster, qui tu vere es!’ Hooker wished to live to finish his Ecclesiastical Polity; so I own I wish life and strength had been spared to me to complete my Philosophy. For, as God hears me, the originating, continuing, and sustaining wish and design in my heart were to exalt the glory of His name; and, which is the same thing in other words, to promote the improvement of mankind. But visum aliter Deo, and His will be done.

NOTES

PAGE 1. COLERIDGE AS PREACHER AND TALKER. The greater part of this appeared first in No. iii of The Liberal (1823), making chap. i of the posthumously published Winter-slow (1839); the paragraph, p. 3, line 27 to p. 7, line 6, was originally a letter to the Examiner, Jan. 12, 1817, on Coleridge's Lay Sermon, reprinted in Political Essays (1819, pp. 137-9), and transferred by Hazlitt to its present context in 1823.

PAGE 17. JEFFREY AND COLERIDGE: Hazlitt reviewed the Biographia Literaria in the Edinburgh Review, 1817, 28, pp. 488 sqq. In this review Jeffrey as editor inserted a long note (from which the present passage is extracted) replying to some strictures passed upon himself and his conduct of the Review in Coleridge's first volume. The passage (not hitherto reprinted) should be read in connexion with the section upon the Province of Criticism printed on p. 158.

PAGE 24, l. 1. When I heard: Coleridge had died three months before Lamb wrote this note; and hardly a month after writing it, Lamb himself died.

PAGE 28. CARLYLE ON COLERIDGE. The Life of John Sterling, of which this extract makes the greater part of the eighth chapter, appeared in 1851. Sterling was born in 1806 and died in 1844: a friend of J. C. Hare, Coleridge, F. D. Maurice, and Carlyle; with Maurice he for some time conducted the Athenaeum.

PAGE 35. EMERSON'S VISIT TO COLERIDGE. Emerson made his pilgrimage to Coleridge's (or rather Gillman's) house in Highgate on the occasion of his first visit to England, in 1833. A few weeks later he visited Wordsworth at Rydal—Wordsworth told him that he 'had always wished that Coleridge would write more to be understood'.

PAGE 46, ll. 1-2. the Dell Of Peace and mild Equality: the Susquehanna valley, in which the Pantisocrats (the All-Rulers Alike) intended to found their ideal society; called, in the poem Pantisocracy, 'the cottaged dell Where Virtue calm with careless step may stray'; and in the lines To the Rev. W. J. Hort, 'Freedom's UNDIVIDED dell, Where Toil and Health with mellow'd Love shall dwell'. Both Coleridge and Wordsworth are fond of the word dell.

PAGE 47, l. 49. some Howard's eye. The reference is to John Howard, the philanthropist, 1726-90. A prisoner of war in France in 1756, he spent his life visiting the prisons of England, Ireland, and the continent; a fourth edition of his principal work, The State of Prisons in England and Wales, with an Account of some Foreign Prisons, had appeared a few years before Coleridge wrote these verses.

PAGE 49. TO THE REV. GEORGE COLERIDGE. In a copy of the Poems of 1797 Coleridge wrote as follows of this Dedication: 'If this volume should ever be delivered according to its direction, i. e. to Posterity, let it be known that the Reverend George Coleridge was displeased and thought his character endangered by the Dedication'.

PAGE 51, l. 6. Friends: Charles Lamb ('my gentle-hearted Charles', line 28) and Wordsworth and Dorothy Wordsworth. Lamb stayed with Coleridge in Nether Stowey for a week in July 1797. It was just before his visit that Mrs. Coleridge 'accidentally emptied a skillet of boiling milk' on Coleridge's foot, confining Coleridge to the house during Lamb's stay. See Coleridge, Letters, pp. 224-7, Lamb, Letters, i, p. 107 (Lucas).

PAGE 52, l. 30. In the great City pent: 'in populous city pent', Milton, Par. Lost. ix. 445; cf. Wordsworth, Prelude, ii. 451, 'Thou, my Friend, was reared In the great City'. See note on p. 101, line 51. Lamb professed always a great contempt for the country—'Thou wert a scorner of the fields, my Friend, But more in show than truth' (Wordsworth, Lines Written after the Death of Charles Lamb, ll. 50-1).

PAGE 54. THE FOSTER-MOTHER'S TALE. Excerpted by Coleridge from the fourth Act of his tragedy Osorio, 154-234. Osorio was written in the summer and autumn of 1797, but first published in 1873. In Jan. 1813 the tragedy was acted, in a revised form, at Drury Lane, under the title Remorse, and ran for twenty nights. Remorse was published in 1813, without the present passage, which was added in an Appendix to the second edition.

PAGE 57. THE DUNGEON. Like The Foster-Mother's Tale this piece was a part of Osorio (Act v, 107-36). It was embodied in the acting edition of Remorse, and appears in the edition of 1830 (v, i. 1-30): where the lines are spoken by Don Alvar.

PAGE 58. THE RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINER. The text here given is that of 1817, in which the marginal notes were added. This revised text differs from that of the Lyrical Ballads mainly by a less degree of archaism in the diction, though even in the later version some false archaisms are retained (e. g. l. 152, 'I wist', A.S. gewis). In the original version it was intended that Wordsworth should be a partner. His account (as given by Lady Richardson) is as follows: 'We agreed to write jointly a poem, the subject of which Coleridge took from a dream which a friend of his once dreamt, concerning a person suffering under a dire curse from the commission of some crime. I . . . supplied the crime, the shooting of the albatross, from an incident I had met with in one of Shelvocke's voyages. We tried the poem conjointly for a day or two, but we pulled different ways, and only a few lines of it are mine' (Grosart, iii. 442).

PAGE 62, ll. 131-8, marginal note, Michael Psellus : c. 1020-1110 : a writer upon theological, medical, and historical subjects, so voluminous that he was known as πολυγραφώτατος. It was said of him that throughout life he never shed a tear.

PAGE 79. CHRISTABEL. Part i was written at Stowey in 1797-8 ; Part ii was read to the Wordsworths at Dove Cottage in August 1800. Coleridge had intended to finish the poem, so that it might be included in the second edition of Lyrical Ballads (1800), and part of the MS. was in the printer's hands for this purpose in September. The poem was, in fact, never finished ; the first two parts were, on Byron's recommendation, published by Murray in 1816 (together with Kubla Khan and The Pains of Sleep). In 1836 Wordsworth said ' he had no idea how Christabelle was to have been finished, and he did not think Coleridge had ever conceived, in his own mind, any definite plan for it ; that the poem had been composed while they were in habits of daily intercourse, and almost in his presence, and when there was the most unreserved intercourse between them . . . and he had never heard from him any plan for finishing it ' (Reminiscences of The Hon. Mr. Justice Coleridge, Grosart, iii. 42).

PAGE 101, ll. 51-2. reared In the great city : Wordsworth, Prelude, ii. 451, seems to be a conscious echo of this. See note on p. 52, l. 30.

PAGE 103, ll. 30-1. The reference is to the events of the years 1792-3. In Feb. 1792 Austria and Prussia entered into alliance. In April 1792 France declared war upon Austria ; and in Feb. 1793 against England, Holland, and Spain.

l. 43. Blasphemy's loud scream : Coleridge is thinking of the transportation of the priests in Oct. 1793, and the celebration of the Festival of Reason in Nov. of the same year. The conflict, in English minds, between the ideals of political liberty and the claims of religion is reflected in Wordsworth, Prelude, vi. 408 sqq.

l. 66. bleak Helvetia's icy caverns : Coleridge was one of many Englishmen who were alienated from Revolutionary France by the aggressive policy of the Republic in Savoy (Savoy was annexed in Nov. 1792), Switzerland, and Holland.

He is probably thinking of the whole tenour of French imperial policy from 1792 to the date of the poem. (Wordsworth had attempted to excuse the annexation of 1792, and had spoken of it as the 'emancipation' of Savoy, that 'slave of slaves'. It was the French 'avidity for conquest in annexing Savoy etc. . . . and invading the rights of Holland' which in 1795 turned Burns against the Revolution.) But the immediate reference of Coleridge's words is to the events of Feb. to April, 1798 (the poem was written in Feb.), which led to the formation of the Helvetic Republic.

PAGE 106, title: AN INVASION. The rumour of Napoleon's intended invasion of England was intended to cover his Egyptian expedition of 1798, which was in fact directed towards the destruction of our East Indian Empire.

PAGE 112, l. 223. my friend: Wordsworth; the 'mansion' was Alfoxden House, which Wordsworth had leased in July 1797 from one John Bartholomew, for a more or less nominal rent. The house, which Dorothy Wordsworth also, in one of her letters, speaks of as a 'mansion', stands in a finely wooded park, about four miles SW. of Nether Stowey, a little south of the main road from Bridgwater to Minehead.

PAGE 117. KUBLA KHAN. Of the genesis of this poem Coleridge gave the following account, in the Introduction prefixed to it in 1816:

'In the summer of the year 1797, the Author, then in ill health, had retired to a lonely farm-house between Porlock and Linton, on the Exmoor confines of Somerset and Devonshire. In consequence of a slight indisposition, an anodyne had been prescribed, from the effects of which he fell asleep in his chair at the moment that he was reading the following sentence, or words of the same substance, in "Purchas's Pilgrimage"; "Here the Khan Kubla commanded a palace to be built, and a stately garden thereunto. And thus ten miles of fertile ground were inclosed with a wall." The Author continued for about three hours in a profound sleep, at least of the external senses, during which time he has the most vivid confidence, that he could not have composed less than from two to three hundred lines; if that indeed can be called composition in which all the images rose up before him as things, with a parallel production of the correspondent expressions, without any sensation or consciousness of effort. On awaking he appeared to himself to have a distinct recollection of the whole, and taking his pen, ink, and paper, instantly and eagerly wrote down the lines that are here preserved. At this moment he was unfortunately called out by a person on business from Porlock, and detained by him above an hour, and on his return to his room, found, to his no small surprise and mortification, that though he still retained some vague and dim recollection of the general purport of the vision, yet, with the exception of some eight or ten scattered lines and images, all the rest had passed away like the images on the surface of a stream into which a stone has been cast, but, alas! without the after restoration of the latter!

PAGE 119. THE DEVIL'S THOUGHTS. This 'Siamese production', as Southey calls it, was the joint work of Coleridge and Southey. Coleridge speaks of Southey as having 'dictated' the first three stanzas and the ninth: 'which are worth all the rest'. Posterity has preferred—or remembered better—the sixth, which is Coleridge's composition. The verses as they were first published in the Morning Post consisted of Stanzas i–ii, iv–v, vii, x, xi, ix, vi, viii, xi–xiii, xvii (in that order). Southey subsequently expanded the poem to 57 stanzas.

The piece gave occasion to Shelley's 'Devil's Walk' and Byron's 'Devil's Drive'. The authorship of it was commonly ascribed to Porson, the famous Cambridge professor of Greek, and was claimed for him by his nephew, in a letter to the Morning Post of Feb. 6, 1830; and in the same month it was separately published as 'a Poem, by Professor Porson'.

l. 20. Rev. vi. 8, 'And I looked, and behold a pale horse, and his name that sat on him was Death.'

PAGE 121, l. 62. General —: 'General Tarleton's', in a MS. copy made by Coleridge's son Derwent at Highgate in June 1820.

l. 1. Brocken's sovran height: Coleridge and Wordsworth left England for Germany on Sept. 16, 1798. On Oct. 1 they separated. Coleridge's excursion to the Brocken took place in May of the following year; we have a record of it in C. Carlyon's Early Years and Late Reflections, i, pp. 185 sqq. It is worth noticing that Coleridge says far less in this poem about the Brocken, which he had seen, than in the lines on Mount Blanc about that mountain, which he never saw.

PAGE 122, ll. 17–18. These lines are the germ of the poem Dejection. See in that poem especially lines 47–8.

PAGE 127, l. 25. O Lady: Dorothy Wordsworth. The Ode was originally addressed to Wordsworth, who is called, in one of the extant versions, William, in another Edmund. Whatever Coleridge's motive for changing the person addressed, it is notable that, for him, as for others, Wordsworth and his sister were so much 'two persons and one soul', that the shift in address from the one to the other made little difference to the poem as a whole. Whatever might appropriately be said to Wordsworth might with equal appropriateness be said to his sister. What he understood she understood; and, where Coleridge was concerned, perhaps more.

PAGE 129, l. 76. There was a time when: the same words begin the second stanza of Coleridge's Mad Monk (1800); and the first stanza of Wordsworth's Intimations of Immortality. Any one who reads the second stanza of the Mad Monk will see at once that Wordsworth had its first four lines in mind when he began his Ode.

l. 104. Lutanist: an Elizabethan word: the N.E.D. quotes Dowland, Second Book of Songs (1600), and Randolph, Muses' Looking Glass (1634). The word occurs also in Johnson's Rasselas.

PAGE 130, l. 120. Otway's self: Thomas Otway, 1652-85, who, in Venice Preserved, has left us one of the only two English tragedies of the first rate which belong to a generation later than that which immediately succeeded Shakespeare.

PAGE 132, l. 30. In the first version Coleridge wrote 'O blacker than the darkness all night long'. The inspiration of the piece came to him, not from Mont Blanc, which he had never seen (see note to p. 121, l. 1), but, as he has himself told us, from Scawfell, to which the first version of the line is finely appropriate. The poem is an expansion of Friderika Brun's 'Ode to Chamouny' (an Ode addressed to Klopstock—Coleridge would be interested in it, since he had made Klopstock's acquaintance in Hamburg: see the second of 'Satyrane's Letters').

Coleridge calls the poem a 'Hymn in the manner of the Psalms'. 'Who would be, who could be, an atheist', he asks, 'in this valley of wonders?' (Prefatory note, Morning Post, Sept. 11, 1802). It is worth recalling that Goethe's thoughts, when he first stood upon the Brocken, found expression in a verse of the Psalms: 'Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him; or the son of man that thou takest account of him?'. For both the Brocken poem and the Chamouni poem Coleridge might have taken as motto the lines of the Latin poet Manilius which Goethe wrote out in the Visitors' Book on the Brocken:

quis caelum posset nisi caeli munere nosse et reperire deum nisi qui pars ipse deorum est?

PAGE 136. TO WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. Wordsworth had finished off the Prelude (not published until after his death, in 1850) that it might be ready for Coleridge on his return from Italy—the poem was addressed to Coleridge. It was read to him by its author at the house of Sir George Beaumont at Coleorton in Jan. 1807. From lines 91 sqq. of the present poem it appears that the recitations occupied several successive evenings.

1. 11. Thoughts all too deep for words: Coleridge is echoing the last line of Wordsworth's (as yet unpublished) 'Immortal Ode': 'Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears'.

PAGE 137, ll. 38-43. Of that dear Hope; the words hang grammatically on 'thou hast dared to tell' (line 6): 'thou hast dared to tell how the stricken hope of human freedom was 'summoned home', made to take refuge in man's soul, and thence, as from a watch-tower, to look, with still illuminated vision, into the far future, and there to see its true nature glorified, itself 'the Angel of the vision'.

PAGE 139, l. 105. thy deep voice: cf. Hazlitt's 'Mr. Wordsworth', in The Spirit of the Age: (Wordsworth) 'has . . . great depth and manliness and a rugged harmony in the tones of his voice. His manner of reading his own poetry is particularly imposing; and in his favourite passages his eye beams with preternatural lustre, and the meaning labours slowly up from his swelling breast. No one who has seen him at these times could go away with an impression that he was a "man of no mark or likelihood".'

1. 1. Idoloclastes Satyrane: the name Satyrane applied to Coleridge by his friends (line 3)—or was it taken by himself?—seems to be derived from the Sir Satyrane of Spenser, Faerie Queene, I. vi. 21, 'A Satyie's son, y-borne in forrest wyld'; and to mean no more than a lover of the woodlands and wilds. The term Iconoclastes is sufficiently explained in lines 8-12. Coleridge habitually conceived of himself as a regenerator, leading a corrupt world back from idolatry. This aspect of him is noticed, without much sympathy, by Carlyle: 'The constant gist of his discourse was lamentation over the sunk condition of the world; which he regarded as given up to Atheism and Materialism, full of mere sordid misbeliefs mispursuits and misresults. All Science had become mechanical. . . . Churches themselves had died away into a godless mechanical condition, and stood there as mere Cases of Articles, mere forms of Churches' (Life of Sterling, ch. viii).

A foot-note to the poem, as it first appeared in The Friend, spoke of it as 'imitated, though in the movements rather than the thoughts, from the viith of Gli Epitafi of Chiabrera'. Chiabrera's poem is one of those translated by Wordsworth; and the reader may judge of the degree of Coleridge's indebtedness. Wordsworth, in an unpublished letter of 1840, speaks severely of Coleridge for concealing, as he thinks, the extent of his obligation to Chiabrera.

PAGE 142. TO NATURE. 1. 7: this line gives us a solitary octosyllabic verse among decasyllables. This is probably accident—thę verses were not printed during Coleridge's lifetime.

PAGE 150. INTRODUCTION TO THE 'BIOGRAPHIA LITERARIA'. The three extracts here offered from the Biographia do not afford any illustration of Coleridge's critical powers at their best. To illustrate these, it would have been necessary to print some considerable portion of his criticism of Wordsworth's poetry. It has been thought undesirable to do this here since this part of the Biographia is well illustrated in the selection from it given, in the same series, in Mr. Nichol Smith's Wordsworth: Prose and Poetry.

PAGE 153, l. 1. Mr. Bowles: William Lisle Bowles, 1762-1850. His twenty sonnets appeared in 1789 (2nd edition: the first edition contained only fourteen; the fourth, 1794, contained twenty-seven).

l. 6. Dr. Middleton: the first Bishop of Calcutta (1813). He died in 1824.

ll. 9-13. The verses are taken from Petrarch's Latin letters, Bk. i, Ep. i.

PAGE 154, ll. 20-2. Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 559-61.

PAGE 155, ll. 11-12. The Lewesdon Hill of Mr. Crowe: published in 1788 (William Crowe, 1745-1829).

PAGE 156, l. 7. Darwin's Botanic Garden: Erasmus Darwin, grandfather of Charles Darwin, the naturalist. The Botanic Garden (1789-92) was a didactic poem in heroic couplets, written in the worst artificial manner of the successors of Pope; and accompanied by expositions in prose of the author's views on poetic diction.

l. 16. The works of Donne were not easily accessible in Coleridge's time—Hazlitt, lecturing upon the English poets, confesses his ignorance of Donne. The element of passion in Donne is, of course, far less obscured than Coleridge here suggests. But Coleridge¹ has rightly placed Donne and Cowley as English poets who, in their diction, approach nearly to the ideals of the Wordsworthian school. The debt of Coleridge to Cowley is much greater than is commonly realized. If Coleridge's so-called Odes are not Odes, they conform to the model set by Cowley in his Pindarics; and without Cowley we should, it is likely, have had no Coleridge.

1 What he says may be compared with what is said by Dryden in the Essay on Dramatic Poetry: 'There is this difference between (Cleveland's) Satires and Doctor Donne's, that the one gives us deep thoughts in common language, though rough cadence; the other gives us common thoughts in abstruse words' (Ker, i, p. 52).
